Grazia Goa Con
From J. Chandl
1856

2698 f. 74
THE ESSAYS or COUNSELS
of
SIR FRANCIS BACON.

Londinum, [1694].
THE

ESSAYS

OR

COUNSELS

Moral, Economical, and Political,

WITH

ELEGANT SENTENCES,

HINTS FOR CONVERSATION,

AND ON THE

CHOICE OF GOOD AND EVIL,

By Sir Francis Bacon,

Lord Verulam and Viscount St Alban,

AS CORRECTED AND ENLARGED BY THE HONOURABLE AUTHOR, AND NOW MORE EXACTLY PUBLISHED.

London:

Printed by B. R. Howlett, 10, Frith Street, Soho,

FOR J. BOOTH, DUKE STREET, PORTLAND PLACE.

1818.
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Of Truth</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Death</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unity of Religion</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revenge</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adversity</td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Simulation and Dissimulation</td>
<td>17</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parents and Children</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marriage and Single Life</td>
<td>24</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Envy</td>
<td>26</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Love</td>
<td>33</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Great Place</td>
<td>36</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boldness</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Goodness and Goodness of Nature</td>
<td>44</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nobility</td>
<td>47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seditions and Troubles</td>
<td>49</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Atheism</td>
<td>60</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Superstition</td>
<td>64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Travel</td>
<td>67</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Empire</td>
<td>69</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Counsel</td>
<td>76</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Delays</td>
<td>83</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cunning</td>
<td>84</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wisdom for a Man’s Self</td>
<td>89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innovation</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dispatch</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seeming Wise</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friendship</td>
<td>98</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Expense</td>
<td>108</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The true Greatness of Kingdoms and Estates</td>
<td>110</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Regimen of Health</td>
<td>128</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suspicion</td>
<td>139</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Discourse</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTENTS</td>
<td>Page</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of Plantations</td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Riches</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Prophecies</td>
<td>140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Ambition</td>
<td>144</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Masks and Triumphs</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Nature in Men</td>
<td>149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Custom and Education</td>
<td>151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Fortune</td>
<td>154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Usury</td>
<td>157</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Youth and Age</td>
<td>162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Beauty</td>
<td>165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Deformity</td>
<td>167</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Building</td>
<td>168</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Gardens</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Negotiating</td>
<td>184</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Followers and Friends</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Suitors</td>
<td>188</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Studies</td>
<td>191</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Faction</td>
<td>193</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Ceremonies and Respects</td>
<td>196</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Praise</td>
<td>198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Vain Glory</td>
<td>201</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Honour and Reputation</td>
<td>203</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Judicature</td>
<td>206</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Anger</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Vicissitude of Things</td>
<td>215</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>— Fame</td>
<td>222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Character of Julius Cæsar</td>
<td>225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Character of Augustus Cæsar</td>
<td>234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Of a King</td>
<td>235</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Short Notes for Civil Conversation</td>
<td>239</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous Sentences</td>
<td>241</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the Choice of Good and Evil, a Fragment</td>
<td>251</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>252</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
To the Right Honourable my very good Lord, the Duke of Buckingham his Grace, Lord High Admiral of England.

Excellent Lord,

Solomon says, "a good name is a precious ointment;" and, I assure myself, such will your Grace's name be with posterity; for your fortune and merit both have been eminent; and you have planted things that are like to last. I do now publish my Essays; which, of all my other works, have been most current: for that, as it seems, they come home to men's business and bosoms. I have enlarged them both in number and weight; so that they are indeed a new work. I thought it therefore agreeable to my affection and obligation to your Grace, to prefix your name before them, both in English and Latin; for I do conceive, that the Latin Volume of them (being in the universal language) may last as long as books last. My Instauration I dedicated to the King; my History of Henry the Seventh, (which I have now also translated into Latin) and my Portions of Natural History, to the Prince. And these I dedicate to your Grace, being of the best fruits that, by the good increase which God gives to my pen and labours, I could yield. God lead your Grace by the hand.

Your Grace's most obliged and faithful Servant,

Fr. St. Alban.

There happened in my time, one noble Speaker, [Lord Verulam] who was full of gravity in his speaking. His language (where he could spare or pass by a jest) was nobly censorious. No man ever spake more neatly, more expressly, more weightily, or suffered less emptiness, less idleness, in what he uttered. No member of his speech but consisted of the own graces. His hearers could not cough or look aside from him without loss. He commanded, where he spoke; and had his judges angry and pleased at his devotion. No man had their affections more in his power. The fear of every man that heard him, was, lest he should make an end. ————Lord Egerton, the Chancellor, a great and grave orator, &c. But his learned and able (though unfortunate) successor, [Lord Bacon] is he, who hath filled up all members, and performed that in our tongue, which may be compared or preferred, either to insolent Greece or haughty Rome. In short, within his view, and about his times, were all the wits born, that could honour a language or help study. Now things daily fall; wits grow downward, and eloquence goes backward: so that he may be named, and stand as the mark and αξιούργιον of our language.

My conceit of his person was never increased toward him, by his place or honours. But I have and do reverence him for the greatness that was only proper to himself, in that he seemed to me ever, by his work, one of the greatest men, and most worthy of admiration at had been in many ages.
ESSAYS.

Of Truth.

What is Truth? said jesting Pilate, and would not stay for an answer. Certainly there be, that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free-will in thinking, as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits, which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them, as was in those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labour, which men take in finding out of Truth; nor again, that when it is found, it imposeth upon men's thoughts, that doth bring lies in favour; but a natural, though corrupt love, of the lie itself. One of the later schools of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand, to think what should be in it, that men should love lies; where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets, nor for advantage, as with the merchant, but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell. This same Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks, and mummeries, and triumphs of th world, half so stately and daintily as candle-lights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that sheweth best by day; but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle, that showeth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt, that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like; but it would leave the minds of a number of men, poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselves? One of the Fathers in great severity called Poesy, "the wine of Dæmons," because it filleth the imagination, and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in, and settlemeth in it, that doth the hurt, such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections; yet Truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth, that the inquiry of Truth, which is the love-making, or wooing of it; the knowledge of Truth, which is the presence of it; and the belief of Truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature of God in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his Sabbath-work ever since, is the illumination of his spirit. First, he breathed light upon the face of the matter or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man; and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. The poet that beautified the sect, that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea; a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle, and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage-ground of Truth (an hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene); and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in the vale below:" so always that this prospect be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly it is heaven upon earth, to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of Truth.
OF TRUTH.

To pass from theological and philosophical Truth, to the Truth of civil business, it will be acknowledged, even by those who practise it not, that clear and round dealing is the honour of man's nature, and that mixture of falsehood is like alay in coin of gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent, which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that does so cover a man with shame, as to be found false and pernicious. And therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace, and such an odious charge—saith he, “If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth, is as much as to say, that he is brave towards God, and a coward towards men.” For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood, and breach of faith, cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal, to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men; it being foretold, that when Christ cometh, “he shall not find faith upon the earth.”

B 2

Of Death.

Men fear Death, as children fear to go in the dark: and as that natural fear in children is increased with tales, so is the other. Certainly the contemplation of Death, as “the wages of sin,” and passage to another world, is holy and religious; but the fear of it, as a tribute due unto nature, is weak. Yet in religious meditations, there is sometimes mixture of vanity and superstition. You shall read in some of the friars’ books of mortification, that a man should think with himself, what the pain is, if have but his finger’s end pressed or tortured, and thereby imagine what the pains of Death are, when the whole body is corrupted and dissolved; when many times Death passeth with less pain, than the torture of a limb; for the most vital parts are not the quickest of sense. And by him that spake only as a philosopher, and natural man, it was well said: "The preparation of Death terrifies more than Death itself." Groans, and convulsions, and a discoloured face, and friends weeping, and blacks, and obsequies, and the like, shew Death terrible. It is worthy the observing, that there is no passion in the mind of man so weak, but it mates and masters the fear of Death: and therefore Death is no such terrible enemy, when a man hath so many attendants about him, that can win the combat of him. Revenge triumphs over Death; Love slighteth it; Honour aspireth to it; Grief flyeth to it; Fear pre-occupateth it. Nay we read, after Otho the Emperor had slain himself, Pity (which is the tenderest of affections) provoked many to die, out of mere compassion to their Sovereign, and as the truest sort of followers. Nay, Seneca adds Niceness and Satiety: "Think how long you could bear to be doing the same things over and over again; not only a brave or a wretched man, but also a fastidious one, may be very willing to die." A man would die, though he were neither valiant nor miserable, only upon a weariness to do the same thing so oft over and over.* It is no less worthy to observe, how little alteration in good spirits the approaches of Death make. For they appear to be the same men, till the last instant. Augustus Caesar died in a compliment: "Livia, live ever mindful of our marriage, and farewell." Tiberius in dissimulation, as Tacitus saith of him: "Now the strength of the body left Tiberius, but not his dissimulation." Vespasian in a jest, sitting upon the stool: "In my opinion I am become God." Galba with a sentence: "Strike, if it should benefit the Roman people," holding forth his neck. Septimius Severus in dispatch: "Make haste, if any thing remains for me to do." And the like. Certainly the Stoics bestowed too much cost upon Death, and by their great preparations made it appear more fearful. "Better," saith he, "who considers Death, or the extreme end of life, among the common circumstances or gifts of nature." It is as natural to die, as to be born; and to a little infant perhaps the one is as painful as the other. He that dies in an earnest pursuit, is like one that is wounded in hot blood, who for the time scarce feels the hurt; and therefore a mind fixed, and bent upon somewhat that is good, doth avert the dolours of Death. But above all, believe it, the sweetest canticle is, "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace," when a man hath obtained worthy ends and expectations. Death hath this also; that it openeth the gate to good fame, and extinguisheth envy.

* To illustrate this observation, I remember an anecdote of a man committing suicide, and giving as his reason, that he was tired of daily putting on and pulling off his clothes. This will explain the force of the sentence above. Editor.
OF UNITY IN RELIGION.

—— When dead, he shall be equally beloved.

Of Unity in Religion.

RELIGION being the chief band of human society, it is a happy thing when itself is well contained within the true band of Unity. The quarrels and divisions about Religion were evils unknown to the heathen. The reason was, because the religion of the heathen consisted rather in rites and ceremonies, than in any constant belief. For you may imagine what kind of faith theirs was, when the chief doctors and fathers of their church were poets. But the true God hath this attribute, that he is a jealous God, and therefore his worship and Religion will endure no mixture nor partner. We shall therefore speak a few words concerning the Unity of the Church; what are the fruits thereof, what the bonds, and what the means.

The fruits of Unity (next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all) are two; the one wards those that are without the Church, the other towards those that are within. For the former: it is certain that heresies and schisms are of all others the greatest scandals, yea, more than corruption of manners. For as in the natural body, a wound or solution of continuity is worse than a corrupt humour; so in the spiritual. So that nothing doth so much keep men out of the Church, and drive them out of the Church, as breach of Unity: and therefore whensoever it cometh to that pass, that one saith, "Behold he is in the desert;" another saith, "Behold he is in the secret temples;" that is, when some men seek Christ in the conventicles of heretics, and others in an outward face of a church, that voice had need continually to sound in men's ears, "Nolite exire," "Go not out." The Doctor of the Gentiles (the propriety of whose vocation drew him to have a special care of those without) saith, "If an heathen come in and hear you speak with several tongues, will he not say that you are mad?" And certainly it is little better, when atheists and profane persons do hear of so many discordant and contrary opinions in Religion; it doth avert them from the Church, and maketh them to sit down in the chair of the scorners. It is but a light thing to be vouched in so serious a matter, but yet it expresseth well the deformity.

There is a master of scoffing, that, in his catalogue
OF UNITY IN RELIGION.

of books of a feigned library, sets down the title of a book, "The Morrice-dance of Heretics." For indeed every sect of them hath a diverse posture, or cringe by themselves, which cannot but move derision in worldlings, and depraved politics who are apt to contempt holy things.

As for the fruit towards those that are within; it is peace, which containeth infinite blessings: it establisheth faith; it kindleth charity; the outward peace of the Church distilleth into peace of conscience; and it turneth the labours of writing and reading of controversies, into treatises of mortification and devotion.

Concerning the bonds of Unity; the true placing of them importeth exceedingly. There appear to be two extremes. For to certain zealots all speech of pacification is odious. "Is it peace, Jehu? what hast thou to do with peace? Turn thee behind me." Peace is not the matter, but following and party. Contrariwise certain Laodiceans, and luke-warm persons, think they may accommodate points of Religion by middle ways, and taking part of both, and witty reconcilements; as if they would make an arbitrement between God and man. But these extremes are to be avoided; which will be done, if the league of Christians, penned by our Saviour himself, were in the two cross clauses thereof, soundly and plainly expounded; "He that is not with us, is against us:" and again, "he that is not against us, is with us:" that is, if the points fundamental, and of substance in Religion, were truly discerned and distinguished from points not merely of faith, but of opinion, order, or good intention. This is a thing may seem to many a matter trivial, and done already; but if it were done less partially, it would be embraced more generally.

Of this I may give only this advice, according to my small model: Men ought to take heed of rending God's church by two kinds of controversies: the one is, when the matter of the point controverted is too small and light, not worth the heat and strife about it, kindled only by contradiction. For, as it is noted by one of the Fathers, "Christ's coat indeed had no seam, but the Church's vesture was of divers colours; whereupon he saith, "There may be a variety of colours in the vesture, but let there be no rent;" they be two things, Unity and Uniformity. The other is, when the matter of the point controverted is great, but it is driven to an over-great subtilty and obscurity, so that it becometh a thing rather ingenious than substantial. A man that is of judgment and understanding, shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself, that those which so differ, mean one thing, and yet they themselves would never agree. And if it so come to pass, in that distance of judgment which is between man and man, shall we not think that God above, that knows the heart, doth not discern that frail men in some of their contradictions intend the same thing, and accepteth of both? The nature of such controversies is excellently expressed by Saint Paul, in the warning and precept that he giveth concerning the same: "Avoid profane novelties of words or expressions, and the oppositions of science falsely so called." Men create oppositions which are not, and put them into new terms so fixed; as whereas the the meaning ought to govern the term, the term in effect governeth the meaning. There be also two false peace, or unities; the one, when the peace is grounded but upon an implicit ignorance; for all colours will agree in the dark: the other when it is pieced up upon a direct admission of contraries in fundamental points. For truth and falsehood in such things, are like the iron and clay in the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image; they may cleave, but they will not incorporate.

Concerning the means of procuring Unity; men must be aware, that in the procuring or muniting of Religious Unity, they do not dissolve and deface the laws of charity, and of human society. There be two swords amongst Christians, the spiritual and temporal; and both have their due office and place in the maintenance of Religion. But we may not take up the third sword, which is Mahomet's sword, or like unto it; that is, to propagate Religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences, except it be in cases of overt scandal, blasphemy, or intermixture of practice against the state; much less to nourish seditions, to authorize conspiracies and rebellions, to put the sword into the people's hands, and the like, tending to the subversion of all Government, which is the ordinance of God. For this is but to dash the first table against the second, and so to consider men as Christians, as we forget that they are men. Lucretius the poet, when he beheld the act of Agamemnon, that could endure the sacrificing of his own daughter, exclaimed:

"To such a height of evils could superstition persuade him."

What would he have said, if he had known of the massacre in France, or the powder-treason of England? He would have been seven times more epicure and atheist than he was: for as the temporal sword is to be drawn with great circumspection in cases of Religion; so it is a thing monstrous to put it into the hands of the common people. Let that be left unto the Anabaptists, and other furies. It was great blasphemy, when the Devil said, "I will ascend, and be like the highest;" but it is greater blasphemy to personate God, and bring him in, saying, "I will descend, and be like the prince of darkness:" and what is it better to make the cause of Religion to descend to the cruel and execrable actions of murdering princes, butchery of people, and subversion of states and governments? Surely this is to bring down the Holy Ghost, instead of the likeness of a Dove, in the shape of a vulture or raven; and to set out of the bark of a Christian church, a flag of a bark of pirates and assassins. Therefore it is most necessary, that the Church by doctrine and decree, princes by their sword, and all learnings, both Christian and moral, as by their Mercury rod, do damn and send to Hell for ever those facts and opinions, tending to the support of the same, as hath been already in good part done. Surely in councils concerning Religion, that counsel of the Apostle would be prefixed, "The wrath of man does not fill up the justice of God." And it was a notable observation of a wise Father, and no less ingenuously confessed, "that those which held and persuaded pressure of consciences, were commonly interested therein themselves for their own ends."

Of Revenge.

REVENGE is a kind of wild justice; which the more man's nature runs to, the more ought law to weed it out. For as to the first wrong, it doth but offend the law; but the revenge of that wrong putteth the law out of office. Certainly, in taking Revenge, a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over, he is superior; for it is a prince's part to pardon. And Solomon, I am sure, saith: "It is the glory of a man to pass by an offence." That which is past, is gone, and irrecoverable; and wise men have enough to do with things present, and to come: therefore they do but trifle with themselves, that labour in past matters. There is no man doth a wrong for the wrong's sake; but thereby to purchase himself profit, or pleasure, or honour, or the like. Therefore why should I be angry with a man for loving himself better than me? And if any man should do wrong merely out of ill-nature, why? yet it is but like the thorn or briar, which prick and scratch, because they can do no other. The most tolerable sort of Revenge, is for those wrongs which there is no law to remedy: but then let a man take heed, that the revenge be such as there is no law to punish; else a man's enemy is still beforehand, and it is two for one. Some, when they take revenge, are desirous the party should know whence it cometh: this is the more generous. For the delight seemeth to be not so much in doing the hurt, as in making the party repent. But base and crafty cowards are like the arrow that flieth in the dark. Cosmus Duke of Florence had a desperate saying against perfidious or neglecting friends, as if those wrongs were unpardonable: "You shall read," saith he, "that we are commanded to forgive our enemies; but you never read, that we are commanded to forgive our friends." But yet the spirit of Job was in a better tune; "Shall we," saith he, "take good at God's hand, and not be content to take evil also?" And so of friends in a proportion. This is certain, that a man that studieth revenge, keeps his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal, and do well. Public revenges are for the most part fortunate, as that for the death of Cæsar, for the death of Pertinax, for the death of Henry the Third of France, and many more. But in private revenges it is not so. Nay, rather vindicative persons live the life of witches; who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate.
OF REVENGE.

Of Adversity.

It was a high speech of Seneca, (after the manner of the Stoics) "that the good things which belong to Prosperity are to be wished, but the good things that belong to Adversity are to be admired:" "Bona rerum secundarum optabilia, adversarum mirabilia." Certainly, if miracles be the command over nature, they appear most in Adversity. It is yet a higher speech of his, than the other, (much too high for a heathen) "It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: "Vere magnum habere fragilitatem hominis, securitatem Dei." This would have done better in poesy, where transcendencies are more allowed. And the poets indeed have been busy with it; for it is in effect the thing, which is figured in that strange fiction of the ancient poets, which seemeth not to be without mystery; nay, and to have some approach to the state of a Christian: that "Hercules, when he went to unbind Prometheus, (by whom human nature is represented) sailed the length of the great ocean in an earthen pot or pitcher;" lively describing Christian resolution, that saileth in the frail bark of the flesh, through the waves of the world. But to speak in a mean: the virtue of Prosperity is temperance; the virtue of Adversity is fortitude, which in morals is the more heroical virtue. Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament, Adversity is the blessing of the New, which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favour. Yet even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs, as carols. And the pencil of the Holy Ghost hath laboured more in describing the afflictions of Job, than the felicities of Solomon.
OF SIMULATION AND DISSIMULATION. 17

Prosperity is not without many fears and distastes; and Adversity is not without comforts and hopes. We see in needle-works and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a sad and solemn ground, than to have a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Judge therefore of the pleasure of the heart, by the pleasure of the eye. Certainly virtue is like precious odours, most fragrant when they are incensed or crushed: for Prosperity doth best discover vice, but Adversity doth best discover virtue.

Of Simulation and Dissimilation.

DISSIMULATION is but a faint kind of policy or wisdom; for it asketh a strong wit and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Therefore it is the weaker sort of politics, that are the great Dissemblers.

Tacitus saith, "Livia sorted well with the arts of her Husband, and Dissimilation of her Son;" attributing arts or policy to Augustus, and Dissimulation to Tiberius. And again, when Mucianus encourageth Vespasian to take arms against Vitellius, he saith, "We rise not against the piercing judgment of Augustus, nor the extreme caution or closeness of Tiberius." These properties of arts or policy, and Dissimulation, or closeness, are indeed habits and faculties, several, and to be distinguished. For if a man have that penetration of judgment, as he can discern what things are to be laid open, and what to be secreted, and what to be showed at half lights, and to whom, and when, (which indeed are arts of state, and arts of life, as Tacitus well calleth them) to him a habit of Dissimulation is a hinderance, and a poorness. But if a man cannot attain to that judgment, then it is left to him generally to be close, and a Dissembler. For where a man cannot choose or vary in particulars, there it is good to take the safest and wariest way in general; like the going softly by one that cannot well see. Certainly the ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity: but then they were like horses, well managed; for they could tell passing well, when to stop or turn; and at such times, when they thought the case indeed required Dissimulation, if then they used it, it came to pass, that the former opinion spread abroad of their good faith, and clearness of dealing, made them almost invisible.

There are three degrees of this hiding and veiling of man's self. The first—closeness, reservation, and secrecy; when a man leaveth himself without observation, or without hold to be taken what he is. The second, Dissimulation in the negative; when a man lets fall signs and arguments, that he is not that he is. And the third, Simulation in the affirmative; when a man industriously and expressly feigns and pretends to be that he is not.

For the first of these, secrecy: it is indeed the virtue of a Confessor; and assuredly the secret man heareth many confessions: for who will open himself to a blab, or a babbler? But if a man be thought secret, it inviteth discovery, as the more close air sucketh in the more open: and as in confession, the revealing is not for worldly use, but for the ease of a man’s heart; so, secret men come to the knowledge of many things in that kind, while men rather discharge their minds, than impart their minds. In few words, mysteries are due to secrecy. Besides (to say truth) nakedness is uncomely, as well in mind as in body; and it addeth no small reverence to men’s manners and actions, if they be not altogether open. As for talkers, and futile persons, they are commonly vain, and credulous withal. For he that talketh what he knoweth, will also talk what he knoweth not. Therefore set it down, that an habit of secrecy is both politic and moral. And in this part it is good, that a man’s face give his tongue leave to speak. For the discovery of man’s self, by the tracks of his countenance, is a great weakness and betraying, by how much it is many times more marked and believed, than a man’s words.
OF SIMULATION AND DISSIMULATION.

For the second, which is Dissimulation: it followeth many times upon secrecy by a necessity; so that he that will be secret, must be a Dissembler in some degree. For men are too cunning, to suffer a man to keep an indifferent carriage between both, and to be secret without swaying the balance on either side. They will so beset a man with questions, and draw him on, and pick it out of him, that without an absurd silence, he must show an inclination one way; or if he do not, they will gather as much by his silence, as by his speech: as for equivocations, or oracular speeches, they cannot hold out long: so that no man can be secret, except he give himself a little scope of Dissimulation, which is, as it were, but the skirts or train of secrecy.

But for the third degree, which is Simulation, and false profession: that I hold more culpable, and less politic, except it be in great and rare matters. And therefore a general custom of Simulation (which is this last degree) is a vice, rising either of a natural falseness or fearfulness, or of a mind that hath some main faults; which because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise Simulation in other things, lest his hand should be out of use.

The great advantages of Simulation and Dissimulation are three. First, to lay asleep opposition, and to surprise: for where a man's intentions are published, it is an alarm to call up all that are against them. The second is, to reserve to a man's self a fair retreat: for if a man engage himself by a manifest declaration, he must go through, or take a fall. The third is, the better to discover the mind of another: for to him that opens himself, men will hardly show themselves adverse, but will (fair) let him go on, and turn their freedom of speech to freedom of thought. And therefore it is a good shrewd proverb of the Spaniard, "Tell a lie, and find a troth;" as if there were no way of discovery but by Simulation.
OF SIMULATION AND DISSIMULATION. 21

There be also three disadvantages to set it even. The first, that Simulation and Dissimulation commonly carry with them a show of fearfulness, which in any business doth spoil the feathers of round flying up to the mark. The second, that it puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise co-operate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends.

The third and greatest is, that it depriveth a man of one of the most principal instruments for action, which is trust and belief. The best composition and temperature is, to have openness in fame and opinion, secrsry in habit, Dissimulation in seasonable use, and a power to feign if there be no remedy.
Of Parents and Children.

The joys of Parents are secret, and so are their griefs and fears; they cannot utter the one, nor they will not utter the other. Children sweeten labours, but they make misfortunes more bitter: they increase the cares of life, but they mitigate the remembrance of death. The perpetuity by generation is common to beasts; but memory, merit, and noble works, are proper to men: and surely a man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men, which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. They that are the first raisers of their houses, are most indulgent towards their Children; beholding them as the continuance, not only of their kind, but of their work, and so both Children and Creatures.

The difference in affection of Parents towards their several Children, is many times unequal, and sometimes unworthy, especially in the mother; as Solomon saith, "A wise son rejoiceth the father, but an ungracious son shames the mother." A man shall see, where there is a house full of Children, one or two of the eldest respected, and the youngest made wantons; but in the midst, some that are as it were forgotten, who many times nevertheless prove the best. The illiberality of Parents in allowance towards their Children, is an harmful error, makes them base, acquaints them with shifts, makes them sort with mean company, and makes them surfeit more when they come to plenty: and therefore the proof is best, when men keep their authority towards their Children, but not their purse. Men have a foolish manner (both Parents, and school-masters, and servants) in creating and breeding an emulation between brothers, during childhood, which many times sorteth to discord when they are men, and disturbeth families. The Italians make little difference between Children and nephews, or near kinsfolks; but so they be of the lump, they care not, though they pass not through their own body. And, to say truth, in nature it is much a like matter, insomuch that we see a nephew sometimes resembleth an uncle, or a kinsman, more than his own Parent, as the blood happens. Let Parents choose betimes the vocations and courses they mean their Children should take, for then they are most flexible; and let them not too much apply themselves to the disposition of their Children, as thinking they will take best to that which they have most mind to. It is true, that if the affection or aptness of the Children be extraordinary, then it is good not to cross it: but generally the precept is good, "Choose that which is best; habit will soon make it pleasant and easy:" younger brothers are commonly fortunate, but seldom or never where the elder are disinherited.
OF PARENTS AND CHILDREN.

Of Marriage and Single Life.

He that hath Wife and Children, hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men, which both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason, that those that have Children, should have greatest care of future times, unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are, who, though they lead a Single Life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences. Nay, there are some other, that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay, more, there are some foolish rich covetous men, that take pride in having no children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk; "Such an one is a great rich man;" and another except to it, "Yea, but he hath a great charge of children;" as if it were an abatement to his riches.
But the most ordinary cause of a Single Life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A Single Life doth well for church-men: for charity will hardly water the ground, where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates; for if they be facile and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives put men in mind of their wives and children. And I think the despising of Marriage amongst the Turks, making the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity: and single men, though they be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhaust; yet on the other side, they are more cruel and hard-hearted, (good to make severe inquisitors) because their tenderness is not so oft called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands; as was said of Ulysses, “He preferred his old wife to immortality.” Chaste women are often proud and froward, as presuming upon the merit of their chastity.
is one of the best bonds both of chastity and obedience in the wife, if she thinks her husband wise, which she will never do, if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so as a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will. But yet he was reputed one of the wise men, that made answer to the question—when a man should marry?

"A young man not yet, an elder man not at all." It is often seen, that bad husbands have very good wives; whether it be, that it raiseth the price of their husbands' kindness when it comes, or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be sure to make good their own folly.

Of Envy.

THERE be none of the affections, which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but Love and Envy. They both have vehement wishes, they frame themselves readily into imaginations and suggestions; and they come easily into the eye, especially upon the presence of the objects, which are the points that conduce to fascination, if any such thing there be. We see likewise the Scripture calleth Envy an evil eye; and the astrologers call the evil influences of the stars, evil aspects: so that still there seemeth to be acknowledged in the act of Envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye. Nay, some have been so curious as to note, that the times when the stroke or percussion of an envious eye doth most hurt, are, when the party envied is beheld in glory or triumph; for that sets an edge upon Envy: and besides, at such times the spirits of the person envied do come forth most into the outward parts, and so meet the blow.
OF ENVY.

But leaving these curiosities, (though not unworthy to be thought on in fit place,) we will handle, what persons are apt to Envy others, what persons are most subject to be Envied themselves, and what is the difference between public and private Envy.

A man that hath no virtue in himself, ever envieth virtue in others. For men's minds will either feed upon their own good, or upon others' evil; and who wanteth the one, will prey upon the other; and who so is out of hope to attain to another's virtue, will seek to come at even hand by depressing another's fortune.

A man that is busy and inquisitive, is commonly envious: for to know much of other men's matters cannot be, because all that ado may concern his estate; therefore it must needs be, that he taketh a kind of play-pleasure in looking upon the fortunes of others; neither can he that mindeth but his own business, find much matter for Envy: for Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home: "There is no man who abounds in curiosity, but the same is also a malevolent man."

Men of noble birth are noted to be envious towards new men when they rise: for the distance is altered; and it is like a deceit of the eye, that when others come on, they think themselves go back.

Deformed persons, and eunuchs, and old men, and bastards, are envious: for he that cannot possibly mend his own case, will do what he can to impair another's, except these defects light upon a very brave and heroical nature, which thinketh to make his natural wants part of his honour; in that it should be said, that an eunuch, or lame man, did such great matters, affecting the honour of a miracle, as it was in Narses the eunuch, and Agesilaus, and Tamerlane, that were lame men.

The same is the case of men that rise after calamities and misfortunes; for they are as men fallen out with the times, and think other men's harms a redemption of their own sufferings.

They that desire to excel in too many matters, out of levity and vain-glory, are ever envious; for they cannot want work, it being impossible but many in some one of those things should surpass them; which was the character of Adrian the emperor, that mortally envied poets, and painters, and artificers in works wherein he had a vein to excel.
OF ENVY.

Lastly, near kinsfolks and fellows in office, and those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals, when they are raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them, and cometh oftener into their remembrance, and incurreth likewise more into the note of others; and Envy ever redoubleth from speech and fame. Cain's Envy was the more vile and malignant towards his brother Abel, because when his sacrifice was better accepted, there was nobody to look on. Thus much for those that are apt to Envy.

Concerning those that are more or less subject to Envy: first, persons of eminent virtue, when they are advanced, are less envied: for their fortune seemeth but due unto them; and no man envieth the payment of a debt, but rewards and liberality rather. Again, Envy is ever joined with the comparing of a man's self; and where there is no comparison, no Envy; and therefore kings are not envied, but by kings. Nevertheless, it is to be noted, that unworthy persons are most envied at their first coming in, and afterwards overcome it better; whereas, contrariwise, persons of worth and merit are most envied, when their fortune continueth long. For by that time, though their virtue be the same, yet it hath not the same lustre; for fresh men grow up that darken it.

Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising; for it seemeth but right done to their birth. Besides, there seemeth not much added to their fortunes; and Envy is as the sun-beams, that beat hotter upon a bank or steep rising ground, than upon a flat. And for the same reasons, those that are advanced by degrees, are less envied than those that are advanced suddenly, and per saltum, "at a jump."

Those that have joined with their honour great travels, cares, or perils, are less subject to Envy: for men think that they earn their honours hardly, and pity them sometimes; and pity ever healeth Envy: wherefore you shall observe, that the more deep and sober sort of politic persons, in their greatness, are ever bemoaning themselves, what a life they lead, chaunting "How many evils we endure!" Not that they feel it so, but only to abate the edge of Envy. But this is to be understood of business that is laid upon men, and not such as they call unto themselves: for nothing increaseth Envy more than an unnecessary and ambitious engrossing of business; and nothing doth extinguish Envy more, than for a great person to preserve all other inferior officers in their full rights and preeminences of their places: for by that means there be so many screens between him and Envy.
OF ENVY. 31

Above all, those are most subject to Envy which carry the greatness of their fortunes in an insolent and proud manner, being never well but while they are showing how great they are, either by outward pomp, or by triumphing over all opposition and competition; whereas wise men will rather do sacrifice to Envy, in suffering themselves sometimes of purpose to be crossed and overborne in things that do not much concern them. Notwithstanding so much is true, that the carriage of greatness in a plain and open manner (so it be without arrogancy and vain-glory) doth draw less Envy, than if it be in a more crafty and cunning fashion. For in that course a man doth but disavow fortune, and seemeth to be conscious of his own want in worth, and doth but teach others to envy him.

Lastly, To conclude this part; as we said in the beginning, that the act of Envy had somewhat in it of witchcraft, so there is no other cure of Envy but the cure of witchcraft; and that is, to remove the lot (as they call it) and to lay it upon another. For which purpose, the wiser sort of great persons bring in ever upon the stage somebody upon whom to drive the Envy that would come upon themselves; sometimes upon ministers and servants, sometimes upon colleagues and associates, and the like; and for that turn there are never wanting some persons of violent and undertaking natures, who, so they may have power and business, will take it at any cost.

Now to speak of public Envy. There is yet some good in public Envy; whereas in private there is none. For public Envy is an ostracism that eclipseth men when they grow too great. And therefore it is a bridle also to great ones, to keep them within bounds.

This Envy, being in the Latin word invidia, goeth in the modern languages by the name of Discontentment, of which we shall speak in handling Sedition. It is a disease in a state like to infection: for as infection spreadeth upon that which is sound, and tainteth it; so when Envy is gotten once in a State, it traduceth even the best actions thereof, and turneth them into an ill odour. And, therefore, there is little won by intermingling of plausible actions. For that doth argue but a weakness and fear of Envy, which hurteth so much the more, as it is likewise usual in infections; which if you fear them, you call them upon you.

This public Envy seemeth to bear chiefly upon principal officers or ministers, rather than upon kings and estates themselves. But this is a sure rule, that if the Envy upon the minister be great, when the cause of it in him is small; or if the Envy be general, in a manner, upon all the ministers of an estate, then the Envy (though hidden) is truly upon the state itself. And so much of public Envy or Discontentment, and the difference thereof from private Envy, which was handled in the first place.

We will add this in general, touching the affection of Envy; that, of all other affections, it is the most importune and continual. For of other affections there is occasion given but now and then. And therefore it was well said, "Envy never keeps holiday," i. e. is never at rest. For it is ever working upon some or other. And it is also noted, that Love and Envy do make a man pine, which other affections do not; because they are not so continual. It is also the vilest affection, and the most depraved: for which cause it is the proper attribute of the Devil, who is called, "The envious man, that soweth tares amongst the wheat by night:" as it always cometh to pass, that Envy worketh subtilly, and in the dark, and to the prejudice of good things, such as is the wheat.

Of Love.

The stage is more beholding to Love than the life of man. For, as to the stage, Love is ever matter of comedies, and now and then of tragedies: but in life it doth much mischief; sometimes like a syren, sometimes like a fury. You may observe, that amongst all the great and worthy persons (whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent) there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of Love: which shows, that great spirits, and great business, do keep out this weak passion. You must except, nevertheless, Marcus Antonius, the half partner of the Empire of Rome; and Appius Claudius the Decemvir, the lawgiver; whereof the former was indeed a voluptuous man, and inordinate; but the latter was an austere and wise man. And therefore it seems, (though rarely) that Love can find entrance, not only into an open heart, but also into a heart well fortified, if watch be not well kept. It is a poor saying of Epicurus: "We are to one another a sufficiently large theatre;" i.e. "we need not attempt to look beyond this world." As if man, made for the contemplation of Heaven, and all noble objects, should do nothing but kneel before a little idol, and make himself a subject, though not of the mouth, (as beasts are) yet of the eye, which was given him for higher purposes. It is a strange thing to note the excess of this passion; and how it braves the nature and value of things by this, that the speaking in a perpetual hyperbole is comely in nothing but in Love. Neither is it merely in the phrase: for, whereas it hath been well said, that the Archflatterer, with whom all the petty flatterers have intelligence, is a man's self; certainly, the Love is more. For there was never a proud man thought so absurdly well of himself, as the Lover doth of the person loved: and therefore it was well said, that "it is impossible to love, and to be wise." Neither doth this weakness appear to others only, and not to the party loved: but to the loved most of all; except the Love be reciproque: for it is a true rule, that Love is ever rewarded, either with the reciproque, or with an inward and secret contempt. By how much the more ought men to be aware of this passion, which loseth not only other things, but itself. As for the other losses, the poet's relation doth well figure them; that he that preferreth Helena, quitteth the gifts of Juno and Pallas. For whosoever esteemeth too much of amorous affection, quitteth both riches and wisdom. This passion hath his floods in the very times of weakness; which are great prosperity, and great adversity; though this latter hath been less observed. Both which times kindle Love, and make it more frequent, and therefore show it to be the child of Folly. They do best, who, if they cannot but admit Love, yet make it keep quarter, and sever it wholly from their serious affairs and actions of life: for if it check once with business, it troubleth men's fortunes, and maketh men that they can no ways be true to their own ends. I know not how, but martial men are given to Love; I think it is but as they are given to wine; for perils commonly ask to be paid in pleasures. There is in a man’s nature, a secret inclination and motion towards Love of others; which if it be not spent upon some one, or a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable; as it is seen sometime in Friars. Nuptial Love maketh mankind; friendly Love perfecteth it; but wanton Love corrupteth and embaseth it.

Of Great Place.

Men in Great Place are thrice servants: servants of the Sovereign or State; servants of fame; and servants of business. So as they have no freedom either in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire to seek power, and to lose liberty; or to seek power over others, and to lose power over a man’s self. The rising unto Place is laborious; and by pains men come to greater pains: and it is sometimes base; and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery, and the regress is either a downfall, or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing. "Since you are not what you would be, there is no reason why you should wish to live." Nay, retire men cannot when they would; neither will they, when it was reason; but are impatient of privateness, even in age and sickness, which require the shadow: like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn. Certainly great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions, to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it: but if they think with themselves what other men think of them, and that other men would fain be as they are, then they are happy, as it were, by report; when perhaps they find the contrary within. For they are the first that find their own griefs; though they be the last that find their own faults. Certainly, men in great fortunes are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business they have no time to tend their health, either of body or mind. "Death presses heavy on that man, who, too conspicuously known to others, dies unknown to himself: (i.e. without having studied and known his own character.)" In place, there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse; for in evil, the best condition is not to will, the second not to can: but power to do good, is the true and awful end of aspiring: for good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power and place, as the vantage and commanding ground. Merit and good works is the end of man's motion; and conscience of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest: for if a man can be partaker of God's theatre, he shall likewise be partaker of God's rest. "And God having turned to behold the works which his hands had made, saw that all were very good." And then the Sabbath. In the discharge of the place, set before thee the best examples; for imitation is a globe of precepts. And after a time set before thee thine own example; and examine thyself strictly whether thou didst not best at first. Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory; but to direct thyself what to avoid. Reform therefore without bravery or scandal of former times and persons: but yet set it down to thyself, as well to create good precedents as to follow them. Reduce things to the first institution, and observe wherein, and how they have degenerated; but yet ask counsel of both times, of the antient time what is best, and of the latter time what is fittest. Seek to make thy course regular that men may know before-hand what they may expect, but be not too positive and peremptory; and express thyself well when thou digressest from thy rule. Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence and de facto, than voice it with claims and challenges. Preserve likewise the rights of inferior places; and think it more honour to direct in chief, than to be busy in all. Embrace and invite helps and advices, touching the execution of thy place; and do not drive away such as bring the information, as meddlers, but accept of them in good part. The vices of authority are chiefly four: Delays, Corruption, Roughness, and Faction. For Delays: give easy access, keep times appointed, go through with that which is in hand, and interlace not business but of necessity. For Corruption: not only bind thine own hands, or thy servants' hands from taking, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering: for integrity used, doth the one; but integrity professed, and with a manifest detestation of bribery, doth the other; and avoid not only the fault, but the suspicion. Whosoever is found variable, and changeth manifestly, without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption. Therefore always when thou changest thine opinion or course, profess it plainly, and declare it, together with the reasons that move thee to change, and do not think to steal it. A servant, or a favourite, if he be inward, and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. For Roughness: it is a needless cause of discontent: severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting. As for facility, it is worse than bribery: for bribes come but now and then; but if importunity, or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without; as Solomon saith, "To respect persons is not good; for such a man will transgress for a piece of bread." It is most true that was antiently spoken: "A Place showeth the man;" and it showeth some to the better, and some to the worse. "He would have been considered by the common consent of all, as capable of governing the Empire, if he had never been Emperor;" saith Tacitus of Galba: but of Vespasian he saith: "Vespasian was the only one of the Emperors, who was changed into a better character by being Emperor." Though the one was meant of sufficiency, the other of manners and affection. It is an assured sign of a worthy and generous spirit, whom honour amends: for honour is, or should be, the place of virtue: and as in nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. All rising to Great Place, is by a winding stair and if there be factions, it is good to side a man self, whilst he is in the rising; and to balance himself when he is placed. Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly: for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to look to be called. Be not too sensible, or too remembering of thy place in conversation, and private answers to suitors; but let it rather be said, "When he sits in place, he is another man."

Of Boldness.

It is a trivial grammar-school text, but yet worthy a wise man's consideration. Question was asked of Demosthenes, "What was the chief part of an orator?" He answered, "Action;" what next? "Action;" what next again? "Action." He said it that knew it best, and had by nature himself no advantage in that he commended. A strange thing, that that part of an orator which is but superficial, and rather the virtue of a player, should be placed so high above those other noble parts of invention, elocution, and the rest; nay, almost alone, as if it were all in all. But the reason is plain. There is in human nature generally more of the fool than of the wise; and therefore those faculties, by which the foolish part of men's minds is taken, are most potent. Wonderful like is the case of Boldness in civil business: what first? Boldness. What second and third? Boldness. And yet Boldness is a child of ignorance and baseness, far inferior to other parts. But nevertheless it doth fascinate and bind hand and foot those that are either shallow in judgment, or weak in courage, which are the greatest part; yea, and prevalleth with wise men at weak times. Therefore we see it hath done wonders in popular States, but with senates and princes less; and more, ever upon the first entrance of bold persons into action, than soon after: for Boldness is an ill keeper of promise. Surely, as there are mountebanks for the natural body, so are there mountebanks for the politic body: men that undertake great cures, and perhaps have been lucky in two or three experiments, but want the grounds of science, and therefore cannot hold out. Nay, you shall see a bold fellow many times do Mahomet's miracle: Mahomet made the people believe, that he would call an hill to him; and from the top of it offer up his prayers for the observers of his law. The people assembled; Mahomet called the hill to him again and again; and when the hill stood still, he was never a whit abashed, but said: "If the hill will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet will go to the hill." So these men, when they have promised great matters, and failed most shamefully, yet (if they have the perfection of Boldness) they will but slight it over, and make a turn, and no more ado. Certainly to men of great judgment, bold persons are a sport to behold; nay, and to the vulgar also, Boldness hath somewhat of the ridiculous. For if absurdity be the subject of laughter, doubt you not but great Boldness is seldom without some absurdity. Especially it is a sport to see, when a bold fellow is out of countenance; for that puts his face in a most shrunken and wooden posture, as needs it must: for in bashfulness the spirits do a little go and come, but with bold men, upon like occasion, they stand at a stay, like a Stale at Chess, where it is no Mate, but yet the game cannot stir. But this last were fitter for a satire than for a serious observation. This is well to be weighed, that Boldness is ever blind; for it seeth not dangers and inconveniences: therefore it is ill in counsel, good in execution: so that the right use of bold persons is, that they never command in chief, but be seconds, and under the direction of others. For in counsel it is good to see dangers, and in execution not to see them, except they be very great.
OF BOLDNESS.  43

Of Goodness, and Goodness of Nature.

I take Goodness in this sense, the affecting of the weal of men, which is that the Grecians call Philanthropia; and the word Humanity (as it is used) is a little too light to express it. Goodness I call the habit, and Goodness of Nature the inclination. This of all virtues and dignities of the mind is the greatest, being the character of the Deity; and without it, man is a busy, mischievous, wretched thing, no better than a kind of vermin. Goodness answers to the theological virtue, Charity; and admits no excess, but error. The desire of power in excess, caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess, caused man to fall; but in Charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. The inclination of Goodness is imprinted deeply in the nature of man; insomuch that if it issue not towards men, it will take unto other living creatures; as it is seen in the Turks, a cruel people, who nevertheless are kind to beasts, and give alms to dogs and birds; insomuch as Busbechius reporteth, a Christian boy in Constantinople had like to have been stoned for gagging, in a waggishness, a long-billed fowl. Errors indeed, in this virtue, in Goodness or Charity, may be committed. The Italians have an ungracious proverb: "Tanto buon che val niente;" "So good that he is good for nothing." And one of the doctors of Italy, Nicholas Machiavel, had the confidence to put in writing, almost in plain terms, "that the Christian faith had given up good men in prey to those that are tyrannical and unjust:"
OF GOODNESS, & GOODNESS OF NATURE. 45

which he spake, because indeed there was never law, or sect, or opinion, did so much magnify Goodness as the Christian religion doth. Therefore, to avoid the scandal, and danger both, it is good to take knowledge of the errors of an habit so excellent. Seek the good of other men, but be not in bondage to their faces or fancies; for that is but facility or softness, which taketh an honest mind prisoner. Neither give thou Æsop's cock a gem, who would be better pleased and happier if he had a barley-corn. The example of God teacheth the lesson truly: "He sendeth his rain, and maketh his sun to shine upon the just and unjust;" but he doth not rain wealth, nor shine honour and virtues upon men equally. Common benefits are to be communicated with all; but peculiar benefits with choice. And beware, how, in making the portraiture, thou breakest the pattern; for Divinity maketh the love of ourselves the pattern; the love of our neighbours but the portraiture. "Sell all thou hast and give it to the poor, and follow me:" but sell not all thou hast except thou come and follow me; that is, except thou have a vocation, wherein thou mayst do as much good with little means as with great: for otherwise, in feeding the streams, thou dryest the fountain. Neither is there only a habit of Goodness directed by right reason; but there is in some men, even in nature, a disposition towards it; as, on the other side, there is a natural malignity. For there be that in their nature do not affect the good of others. The lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficulteness, or the like; but the deeper sort to envy and mere mischief. Such men, in other men’s calamities, are as it were in season, and are ever on the loading part; not so good as the dogs that licked Lazarus’ sores, but like flies, that are still buzzing upon any thing that is raw; Misanthropes, that make it their practice to bring men to the bough, and yet have never a tree for the purpose in their gardens, as Timon had. Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature; and yet they are the fittest timber to make great politics of: like to knee-timber, that is good for ships that are ordained to be tossed, but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. The parts and signs of Goodness are many. If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world; and that his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins to them. If he be compassionate towards the afflictions of others, it shows that his heart is like the noble tree, that is wounded itself when it gives the balm. If he easily pardons and remits offences, it shows that his mind is planted above injuries, so that he cannot be shot. If he be thankful for small benefits, it shows that he weighs men's minds, and not their trash. But above all, if he have Saint Paul's perfection, that he would wish to be an Anathema from Christ, for the salvation of his brethren, it shows much of a divine nature, and a kind of conformity with Christ himself.

Of Nobility.

We will speak of Nobility, first as a portion of an estate, then as a condition of particular persons. A monarchy, where there is no Nobility at all, is ever a pure and absolute tyranny, as that of the Turks; for Nobility attempers Sovereignty, and draws the eyes of the people somewhat aside from the Line Royal. But for Democracies they need it not: and they are commonly more quiet, and less subject to sedition, than where there are stirps of Nobles. For men's eyes are upon the business, and not upon the persons; or if upon the persons, it is for the business sake, as fittest, and not for flags and pedigree. We see the Switzers last well, notwithstanding their diversity of religion, and of Cantons: for utility is their bond, and not respects. The united provinces of the Low Countries in their government excel: for where there is an equality, the consultations are more indifferent, and the payments and tributes more cheerful. A great and potent Nobility addeth majesty to a monarch, but diminisheth power; and putteth life and spirit into the people, but presseth their fortune. It is well when Nobles are not too great for Sovereignty, nor for justice; and yet maintained in that height, as the insolency of inferiors may be broken upon them, before it come on too fast upon the majesty of Kings. A numerous Nobility causeth poverty and inconvenience in a State: for it is a surcharge of expense; and besides, it being of necessity that many of the Nobility fall in time to be weak in fortune, it maketh a kind of disproportion between honour and means.

As for Nobility in particular persons: it is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle or building not in decay; or to see a fair timber-tree sound and perfect; how much more to behold an ancient noble family, which hath stood against the waves and weathers of time. For new Nobility is but the act of power; but ancient Nobility is the act of time. Those that are first raised to Nobility are commonly more virtuous, but less innocent than their descendants; for there is rarely any rising, but by a commixture of good and evil arts. But it is reason the memory of their virtues remain to their posterity; and their faults die with themselves. Nobility of birth commonly abateth industry; and he that is not industrious, envieth him that is. Besides, noble persons cannot go much higher; and he that standeth at a stay when others rise, can hardly avoid motions of envy. On the other side, Nobility extinguisheth the passive envy from others towards them; because they are in possession of honour. Certainly kings that have able men of their Nobility, shall find ease in employing them, and a better slide into their business: for people naturally bend to them, as born in some sort to command.

Of Seditions and Troubles.

SHEPHERDS of People had need know the calendars of tempests in State; which are commonly greatest when things grow to equality; as natural tempests are greatest about the Equinoctia. And as there are certain hollow blasts of wind, and secret swellings of seas, before a tempest, so are there in States.

The change of Empires often he declares; Fierce tumults, hidden treasons, open wars. Davn. Virg.
Libels and licentious discourses against the State, when they are frequent and open; and in like sort, false news often running up and down to the disadvantage of the State, and hastily embraced; are amongst the signs of troubles. Virgil, giving the pedigree of Fame, saith, "she was sister to the Giants."

Enrag'd against the Gods, revengeful Earth
Produc'd her, last of the Titanian birth. DRYD. VIRG.

As if fames were the relics of Seditions past; but they are no less, indeed, the preludes of Seditions to come. Howsoever, he noteth it right, that seditious tumults, and seditious fames, differ no more but as brother and sister, masculine and feminine; especially if it come to that, that the best actions of a State, and the most plausible, and which ought to give greatest contentment, are taken in ill sense, and traduced: for that shows the envy great; as Tacitus saith, "Great discontent arose, whether the state affairs were carried on well or ill." Neither doth it follow, that because these fames are a sign of Troubles, that the suppressing of them with too much severity, should be a remedy of Troubles: for the despising of them many times checks them best; and the going about to stop them, doth but make a wonder long-lived.

Also that kind of obedience which Tacitus, speaketh of is to be held suspected: "They kept within the bounds of their duty, but were men of that character, who had rather make their own interpretation and comment on the commands of their Rulers than execute them." Disputing, excusing, cavilling upon mandates and directions, is a kind of shaking off the yoke, and assay of disobedience; especially, if in those disputings, they which are for the direction, speak fearfully and tenderly; and those that are against it audaciously.

Also, as Machiavel noteth well, when Princes, that ought to be common parents, make themselves as a party, and lean to a side, it is a boat that is overthrown by uneven weight on the one side; as was well seen in the time of Henry the Third of France: for first himself entered league for the extirpation of the Protestants, and presently after the same league was turned upon himself: for, when the authority of Princes is made but an accessory to a cause, and that there are other bands that tie faster than the band of Sovereignty, Kings begin to be almost put out of possession.

Also, when discords and quarrels, and factions, are carried openly and audaciously, it is a sign the reverence of Government is lost. For the motions of the greatest persons in a Government, ought to be as the motions of the planets under "the First great Cause of motion," (according to the old opition): which is, that every of them is carried swiftly by the highest motion, and softly in their own motion. And therefore when great ones in their own particular motion move violently, and, as Tacitus expresseth it well, "they were too fond of freedom to remember the will of their Rulers," it is a sign the orbs are out of frame: for reverence is that wherewith Princes are girt from God, who threateneth the dissolving thereof: "I will strip off the diadems of Kings."

So when any of the four pillars of Government are mainly shaken or weakened, (which are Religion, Justice, Counsel, and Treasure) men had need to pray for fair weather.

But let us pass from this part of predictions, (concerning which, nevertheless, more light may be taken from that which followeth) and let us speak first of the materials of Seditions; then of the motives of them; and thirdly, of the remedies.

Concerning the materials of Sedition; it is a thing well to be considered: for the surest way to prevent Seditions (if the times do bear it) is to take away the matter of them. For if there be fuel prepared, it is hard to tell whence the spark shall come that shall set it on fire. The matter of Seditions is of two kinds; much poverty, and much discontentment. It is certain, so many overthrown estates, so many votes for Troubles. Lucan noteth well the state of Rome before the civil war: "Hence at that time a voracious and rapid increase of Usury, and a war arose useful to the objects of the multitude."

This same "multis utile Bellum" is an assured and infallible sign of a State disposed to Seditions and Troubles. And if this poverty and broken estate in the better sort, be joined with a want and necessity in the mean people, the danger is imminent and great; for the rebellions of the belly are the worst. As for discontents, they are in the politic body like to humours in the natural, which are apt to gather preternatural heat, and to inflame. And let no prince measure the danger of them by this, whether they be just or unjust: for that were to imagine people to be too reasonable, who do often spurn at their own good: nor yet by this, whether the griefs whereupon they rise, be in fact great or small; for they are the most dangerous Discontents, where the fear is greater than the feeling: "There is moderation in their sorrow, but not so in their apprehension." Besides, in great oppressions, the same things that provoke the patience, do with all mate the courage; but in fears, it is not so. Neither let any prince or state be secure concerning Discontents because they have been often, or have been long, and yet no peril hath ensued: for as it is true, that every va-
OF SEDITIONS AND TROUBLES.

pour or fume doth not turn into a storm; so it is nevertheless true, that storms, though they blow over divers times, yet may fall at last; and, as the Spanish proverb noteth well, "The cord breaketh at last by the weakest pull."

The causes and motions of Seditions, are innovation in religion, taxes, alteration of laws and customs, breaking of privileges, general oppression, advancement of unworthy persons, strangers, dearths, disbanded soldiers, factions grown desperate; and whatsoever, in offending people, joineth and knitteth them in a common cause.

For the remedies: there may be some general preservatives, whereof we will speak; as for the just cure, it must answer to the particular disease, and so be left to counsel rather than rule.

The first remedy or prevention is, to remove by all means possible that material cause of Sedition, whereof we speak; which is want and poverty in the estate. To which purpose serveth the opening and well-balancing of trade, the cherishing of manufactures, the banishing of idleness, the repressing of waste and excess by sumptuary laws, the improvement and husbanding of the soil, the regulating of prices of things vendible, the moderating of taxes and tributes, and the like. Generally it is to be foreseen, that the population of a kingdom (especially if it be not mown down by wars) do not exceed the stock of the kingdom which should maintain them. Neither is the population to be reckoned only by number; for a smaller number that spend more, and earn less, do wear out an estate sooner than a greater number that live lower, and gather more. Therefore the multiplying of Nobility, and other degrees of quality, in an over proportion to the common people, doth speedily bring a State to necessity: and so doth likewise an overgrown Clergy, for they bring nothing to the stock: and in like manner, when more are bred scholars than preferments can take off.

It is likewise to be remembered, that forasmuch as the increase of any estate must be upon the foreigner; (for whatsoever is somewhere gotten, is somewhere lost). There be but three things which one nation selleth unto another: the commodity as nature yieldeth it; the manufacture, and the picture or carriage: so that if these three wheels go, wealth will flow as in a spring-tide. And it cometh many times to pass, that "the manufacture will cost more than the materials;" that the work and carriage is more worth than the materials, and enricheth a state more: as is notably seen in the Low Countrymen, who have the best mines above ground in the world.

Above all things good policy is to be used, that the treasure and moneys in a State be not ga-
OF SEDITIONS AND TROUBLES.

there into few hands. For otherwise a State may have a great stock, and yet starve. And money is like muck, not good except it be spread. This is done chiefly by suppressing, or at the least keeping a straight hand upon the devouring trades of Usury, Ingrossing, great Pasturages, and the like.

For removing Discontentments, or at least the danger of them, there is in every State (as we know) two portions of subjects, the Nobles and the Commonalty. When one of these is discontent, the danger is not great; for common people are of slow motion, if they be not excited by the greater sort; and the greater sort are of small strength, except the multitude be apt and ready to move of themselves. Then this is the danger, when the greater sort do but wait for the troubling of the waters amongst the meaner, that then they may declare themselves. The Poets feign, that the rest of the Gods would have bound Jupiter; which he hearing of, by the counsel of Pallas, sent for Briareus with his hundred hands, to come in to his aid. An emblem no doubt, to show how safe it is for Monarchs to make sure of the good-will of common people.

To give moderate liberty for griefs and discontentments to evaporate (so it be without too great insolency or bravery), is a safe way. For he that turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, endangereth malign ulcers, and pernicious imposthumations.

The part of Epimetheus might well become Prometheus in the case of Discontentments; for there is not a better provision against them. Epimetheus, when griefs and evils flew abroad, at last shut the lid, and kept Hope in the bottom of the vessel. Certainly the politic and artificial nourishing and entertaining of hopes, and carrying men from hopes to hopes, is one of the best antidotes against the poison of discontentments. And it is a certain sign of a wise government and proceeding, when it can hold men's hearts by hopes, when it cannot by satisfaction; and when it can handle things in such manner, as no evil shall appear so peremptory, but that it hath some outlet of hope: which is the less hard to do, because both particular persons and factions are apt enough to flatter themselves, or at least to brave that which they believe not.

Also the foresight and prevention, that there be no likely or fit Head, whereunto discontented persons may resort, and under whom they may join, is a known, but an excellent point of caution. I understand a fit Head to be one that hath greatness and reputation, that hath confidence with the discontented party, and upon whom they turn their eyes; and that is thought discontented in his own particular: which kind of persons are either to be won, and reconciled to the State, and that in a fast and true manner; or to be fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Generally the dividing and breaking of all factions and combinations that are adverse to the State, and setting them at distance, or at least distrust among themselves, is not one of the worst remedies. For it is a desperate case, if those that hold with the proceeding of the State, be full of discord and faction; and those that are against it, be entire and united.

I have noted, that some witty and sharp speeches, which have fallen from princes, have given fire to Seditions. Cæsar did himself infinite hurt in that speech, "Sylla was ignorant of literature, he therefore was not qualified to dictate, or to be Dictator:" for it did utterly cut off that hope which men had entertained, that he would at one time or other give over his Dictatorship. Galba unaid himself by that speech, "that soldiers were chosen or appointed by him, not purchased;" for it put the soldiers out of hope of the donative. Probus likewise by that speech, "If I shall live, the Roman Empire will have no further occasion for soldiers;" a speech of great despair for the soldiers: and many the like. Surely princes had need, in tender matters, and ticklish times, to beware what they say; especially in these short speeches, which fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of their secret intentions. For as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted.

Lastly: Let princes against all events not be without some great person, one, or rather more, of military valour, near unto them, for the repressing of Seditions in their beginnings. For without that, there useth to be more trepidation in Court, upon the first breaking out of troubles, than were fit. And the State runneth the danger of that; which Tacitus saith: "And such was the habit or state of their minds, that a few openly dared to commit the most atrocious actions, more wished to be concerned in them, and all tamely permitted them to be done." But let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state; or else the remedy is worse than the disease.
Of Atheism.

I had rather believe all the fables in the Legend, and the Talmud, and the Alcoran, than that this universal frame is without a mind. And therefore God never wrought a miracle to convince Atheism, because his ordinary works convince it. It is true, that a little philosophy inclineth man's mind to Atheism; but depth in philosophy bringeth men’s minds about to Religion. For while the mind of man looketh upon second causes scattered, it may sometimes rest in them, and go no further: but when it beholdeth the chain of them confederate and linked together, it must needs fly to Providence and Deity. Nay, even that School which is most accused of Atheism, doth most demonstrate religion: that is, the School of Leucippus and Democritus and Epicurus. For it is a thousand times more credible, that four mutable elements, and one immutable fifth essence, duly and eternally placed, need no God, than that an army of infinite small portions, or seeds unplaced, should have produced this order and beauty without a Divine marshal. The Scripture saith, “The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God;” it is not said, “The fool hath thought in his heart;” so as he rather saith it by rote to himself, as that he would have, than that he can thoroughly believe it, or be persuaded of it.
OF ATHEISM.

For none deny there is a God, but those for whom it maketh that there were no God. It appeareth in nothing more, that Atheism is rather in the lip, than in the heart of man, than by this; that Atheists will ever be talking of that their opinion, as if they fainted in it within themselves, and would be glad to be strengthened by the consent of others. Nay more, you shall have Atheists strive to get disciples, as it fareth with other sects. And, which is most of all, you shall have of them that will suffer for Atheism and not recant; whereas if they did truly think, that there were no such thing as God, why should they trouble themselves? Epicurus is charged, that he did but dissemble for his credit sake, when he affirmed, there were blessed natures; but such as enjoyed themselves, without having respect to the government of the world: wherein, they say, he did temporize; though in secret he thought there was no God. But certainly he is traduced; for his words are noble and divine: "To deny the Gods of the vulgar, is not profane; but to apply the opinions of the vulgar to the Gods, is profane." Plato could have said no more. And although he had the confidence to deny the administration, he had not the power to deny the nature. The Indians of the West have names for their particular gods, though they have no name for God; as if the heathens should have had the names of Jupiter, Apollo, Mars, &c. but not the word Deus: which shows, that even those barbarous people have the notion, though they have not the latitude and extent of it. So that against Atheists the very savages take part with the very subtilest philosophers. The contemplative Atheist is rare: a Diagoras, a Bion, a Lucian perhaps, and some others; and yet they seem to be more than they are: for that all that impugn a received religion or superstition, are by the adverse part branded with the name of Atheists. But the great Atheists indeed are hypocrites, which are ever handling holy things, but without feeling; so as they must needs be cauterized in the end. The causes of Atheism are divisions in religion, if they be many: for any one main division addeth zeal to both sides, but many divisions introduce Atheism. Another is, scandal of priests, when it is come to that, which Saint Bernard saith, "It is not now proper to say, As are the people, so is the priest, because neither now are the people as bad as the priest." A third is, custom of profane scoffing in holy matters, which doth by little and little deface the reverence of religion. And lastly, learned times, especially with peace and prosperity: for troubles and adversities do more bow men's minds to religion. They that deny a God, destroy man's nobility: for certainly man is of kin to the beasts by his body; and if he be not of kin to God by his spirit, he is a base and ignoble creature. It destroys likewise magnanimity, and the raising human nature: for take an example of a dog, and mark what a generosity and courage he will put on, when he finds himself maintained by a man, who to him is instead of a god, or melior natura: which courage is manifestly such, as that creature, without that confidence of a better nature than his own, could never attain. So man, when he resteth and assureth himself upon Divine protection and favour, gathereth a force and faith, which human nature in itself could not obtain. Therefore as Atheism is in all respects hateful, so in this, that it depriveth human nature of the means to exalt itself above human frailty. As it is in particular persons, so it is in nations. Never was there such a State for magnanimity, as Rome. Of this State hear what Cicero saith: "Although, O Conscript Fathers, we may be as partial to ourselves as we please, yet it is neither by our numerous armies that we have subdued the Spaniards, nor by our strength the Gauls, nor by our stratagems the Carthaginians, nor by our skill in the arts the Grecians, nor lastly by this very domestic and native sense of this nation and land have we subdued the Italians themselves and Latins; but by that piety and due sense of religion, because we have perceived that all things are ruled and controlled by the power of the immortal Gods, we have conquered all people and all nations.”
OF ATHEISM.

Of Superstition.

It were better to have no opinion of God at all, than such an opinion as is unworthy of him: for the one is unbelief, the other is contumely; and certainly Superstition is the reproach of the Deity. Plutarch saith well to that purpose: “Surely (saith he) I had rather a great deal men should say, there was no such man at all as Plutarch, than that they should say, that there was one Plutarch, that would eat his children as soon as they were born;” as the poets speak of Saturn. And as the contumely is greater towards God, so the danger is greater towards men. Atheism leaves a man to sense, to philosophy, to natural piety, to laws, to reputation; all which may be guides to an outward moral virtue, though religion were not: but Superstition dismounts all these, and erecteth an absolute monarchy in the minds of men. Therefore Atheism did never perturb states; for it makes men wary of themselves, as looking no further: and we see the times inclined to Atheism (as the time of Augustus Caesar) were civil times. But Superstition hath been the confusion of many states, and bringeth in a new primum mobile, that ravisheth all the spheres of government. The master of Superstition is the people; and in all Superstition, wise men follow fools, and arguments are fitted to practice in a reversed order. It was gravely said by some of the prelates in the Council of Trent, where the doctrine of the school-men bare great sway, "That the school-men were like astronomers, which did feign eccentricrs, and epicycles, and such engines of orbs, to save the phenomena; though they knew there were no such things." And in like manner, that the school-men had framed a number of subtile and intricate axioms and theorems, to save the practice of the Church. The causes of Superstitions are, pleasing and sensual rites and ceremonies: excess of outward and Pharisaical holiness; over-great reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the Church: the stratagems of prelates for their own ambition and lucre: the favouring too much of good intentions, which openeth the gate to conceits and novelties: the taking an aim at Divine matters by human, which cannot but breed mixture of imaginations: and lastly, barbarous times, especially joined with calamities and disasters. Superstition without a veil is a deformed thing: for, as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man; so the similitude of Superstition to Religion makes it the more deformed. And as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms: wo good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a Superstition in avoiding Superstition, when men think to do best, if they go furthest from the Superstition formerly received. Therefore care should be had, that (as it fareth in ill purgings) the good be not taken away with the bad; which commonly is done, when the people is the reformer.
OF TRAVEL.

Of Travel.

TRAVEL, in the younger sort, is a part of education; in the elder, a part of experience. He that travelleth into a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel. That young men travel under some tutor, or grave servant, I allow well; so that he be such a one that hath the language, and hath been in the country before; whereby he may be able to tell them, what things are worthy to be seen in the country where they go, what acquaintances they are to seek, what exercises or discipline the place yieldeth. For else young men shall go hooded, and look abroad little. It is a strange thing, that in sea voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men should make diaries; but in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, for the most part they omit it: as if chance were fitter to be registered than observation. Let diaries therefore be brought in use. The things to be seen and observed, are the courts of princes, especially when they give audience to ambassadors: the courts of justice, while they sit and hear causes; and so of consistories ecclesiastic: the churches and monasteries, with the monuments which are therein extant: the walls and fortifications of cities and towns; and so the havens and harbours: antiquities and ruins: libraries, colleges, disputations and lectures, where any are: shipping and navies: houses and gardens of state and pleasure near great cities: armouries, arsenals, magazines, exchanges, burses, warehouses: exercises of horsemanship, fencing, training of soldiers, and the like: comedies, such whereunto the better sort of persons do resort. Treasuries of jewels and robes: cabinets and rarities. And to conclude, whatsoever is memorable in the places where they go. After all which the tutors or servants ought to make diligent inquiry. As for triumphs, masks, feasts, weddings, funerals, capital executions, and such shows; men need not be put in mind of them: yet are they not to be neglected. If you will have a young man to put his Travel into a little room, and in short time to gather much, this you must do. First, as was said, he must have some entrance into the language before he goeth. Then he must have such a servant or tutor as knoweth the country, as was likewise said. Let him carry with him also some card or book, describing the country where he travelleth; which will be a good key to his inquiry. Let him also keep a diary. Let him not stay long in one city or town, more or less, as the place deserveth, but not long: nay, when he stayeth in one city or town, let him change his lodging from one end and part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Let him sequester himself from the company of his countrymen, and diet in such places where there is good company of the nation where he travelleth. Let him, upon his removes from one place to another, procure recommendation to some person of quality, residing in the place whither he removeth, that he may use his favour in those things he desireth to see or know. Thus he may abridge his Travels with much profit. As for the acquaintance which is to be sought in Travel, that which is most of all profitable, is acquaintance with the secretaries and employed men of ambassadors; for so in travelling in one country, he shall suck the experience of many. Let him also see and visit eminent persons, in all kinds; which are of great name abroad; that he may be able to tell how the life agreeth with the same. For quarrels, they are with care and discretion to be avoided: they are commonly for mistresses, healths, place, and words. And let a man beware how he keepeth company with choleric and quarrelsome persons, for they will engage him into their own quarrels. When a Traveller returneth home, let him not leave the countries where he hath travelled, altogether behind him, but maintain a correspondence by letters with those of his acquaintance which are of most worth. And let his Travel appear rather in his discourse, than in his apparel or gesture; and in his discourse let him be rather advised in his answers, than forward to tell stories: and let it appear, that he doth not change his country manners for those of foreign parts; but only prick in some flowers of that he hath learned abroad, into the customs of his own country.

Of Empire.

IT is a miserable state of mind, to have few things to desire, and many things to fear; and yet that commonly is the case of Kings; who, being at the highest, want matter of desire, which makes their minds more languishing, and have many representations of perils and shadows, which make their minds the less clear; and this is one reason also of that effect which the Scripture speaketh of, "That the king's heart is inscrutable."
multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Hence it comes likewise, that princes many times make themselves desire, and set their hearts upon toys: sometimes upon a building, sometimes upon erecting of an order, sometimes upon the advancing of a person, sometimes upon obtaining excellency in some art or feat of the hand; as Nero for playing on the harp, Domitian for certainty of the hand with the arrow, Commodus for playing at fence, Caracalla for driving chariots, and the like. This seemeth incredible unto those that know not the principle, "That the mind of man is more cheered and refreshed by profiting in small things, than by standing at a stay in great." We see also that the kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, it being not possible for them to go forward infinitely, but that they must have some check or arrest in their fortunes, turn in their latter years to be superstitious and melancholy: as did Alexander the Great; Dioclesian; and, in our memory, Charles the Fifth, and others: for he that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth out of his own favour, and is not the thing he was.

To speak now of the true temper of Empire; it is a thing rare, and hard to keep; for both temper and distemper consist of contraries. But it is one thing to mingle contraries, another to interchange them. The answer of Apollonius to Vespasian is full of excellent instruction; Vespasian asked him, "What was Nero's overthrow?" He answered, "Nero could touch and tune the harp well, but in Government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, sometimes to let them down too low." And certain it is, that nothing destroyeth authority so much, as the unequal and untimely interchange of power pressed too far, and relaxed too much.

This is true, that the wisdom of all these latter times in princes' affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, when they are near, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof. But this is but to try masteries with fortune: and let men beware how they neglect and suffer matter of trouble to be prepared: for no man can forbid the spark, nor tell whence it may come. The difficulties in princes' business are many and great; but the greatest difficulty is often in their own mind. "For it is common with princes," saith Tacitus, "to will contradictories." "The wills of kings are generally violent, and contradictory the one with the other." For it is the solecism of power, to think to command the end, and yet not endure the means.

Kings have to deal with their neighbours, their wives, their children, their prelates or clergy, their nobles, their second nobles or gentlemen, their merchants, their commons, and their men of war. And from all these arise dangers, if care and circumspection be not used.

First, for their neighbours: there can no general rule be given (the occasions are so variable), save one, which ever holdeth; which is, that princes do keep due sentinel, that none of their neighbours do overgrow so (by increasing of territory, by embracing of trade, by approaches, or the like), as they become more able to annoy them, than they were. This is generally the work of standing councils to foresee and to hinder it. During that Triumvirate of Kings, King Henry VIII. of England, Francis I. King of France, and Charles V, Emperor, there was such a watch kept, that none of the three could win a palm of ground, but the other two would straightways balance it, either by confederation, or if need were, by a war, and would not in any wise take up peace at interest. And the like was done by that League (which, Guicciardini saith, was the security of Italy) made between Ferdinando king of Naples, Lorenzius Medicis, and Ludovicus Sforza, potentate, the one of Florence, the other of Milan. Neither is the opinion of some of the school-men to be received; "that a war cannot justly be made but upon a precedent injury or provocation." For there is no question but a just fear of an imminent danger, though there be no blow given, is a lawful cause of a war.

For their wives: there are cruel examples of them. Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband: Roxalana, Solyman's wife, was the destruction of that renowned prince, Sultan Mustapha, and otherwise troubled his house and succession: Edward II. of England, his queen had the principal hand in the deposing and murder of her husband. This kind of danger is then to be feared, chiefly when the wives have plots for the raising of their own children, or else that they be advoutresses.

For their children: the tragedies likewise of dangers from them have been many. And generally the entering of fathers into suspicion of their children, hath been ever unfortunate. The destruction of Mustapha (that we named before) was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman until this day is suspected to be untrue, and of strange blood; for that Selymus II. was thought to be supposititious. The destruction of Crispus, a young prince of rare towardness, by Constantinus the Great, his father, was in like manner fatal to his house; for both Constantinus and Constance his son died violent deaths; and Constantius, his other son, did little better, who died indeed of sickness, but after that Julianus had taken arms against him. The destruction of Demetrius, son to Philip II. of Macedon, turned upon the father, who died of repentance. And many like examples there are; but few or none where the fathers had good by such distrust, except it were where the sons were brought up in open arms against them; as was Selymus I. against Bajazet, and the three sons of Henry II. king of England.

For their prelates: when they are proud and great, there is also danger from them; as it was in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, archbishops of Canterbury, who with their crosiers did almost try it with the king's sword; and yet they had to deal with stout and haughty kings; William Rufus, Henry I. and Henry II. The danger is not from that State, but where it hath a dependance of foreign authority; or where the churchmen come in, and are elected, not by the collation of the king, or particular patrons, but by the people.

For their nobles: to keep them at a distance, it is not amiss; but to depress them, may make a king more absolute, but less safe, and less able to perform any thing that he desires. I have noted it in my History of King Henry the Seventh of England, who depressed his nobility; whereupon it came to pass, that his times were full of difficulties and troubles; for the nobility, though they continued loyal unto him, yet did they not cooperate with him in his business; so that in effect he was fain to do all things himself.

For their second nobles: there is not much danger from them, being a body dispersed. They may sometimes discourse high, but that doth little hurt. Besides, they are a counterpoise to the higher nobility, that they grow not too potent: and lastly, being the most immediate in authority with the common people, they do best temper popular commotions.

For their merchants: they are vena porta; (the name of a vein in the human frame which gathers and conduct the blood to the most vital parts) and if they flourish not, a kingdom may have good limbs, but will have empty veins, and nourish little. Taxes and imposts upon them do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire; the particular rates being increased, but the total bulk of trading rather decreased.

For their commons: there is little danger from them, except it be where they have great and potent heads, or where you meddle with the point of religion, or their customs, or means of life.

For their men-of-war: it is a dangerous state where they live and remain in a body, and are used to donatives; whereof we see examples in the Ja-nizaries, and Praetorian bands of Rome: but trainings of men, and arming them in several places, and under several commanders, and without donatives, are things of defence, and no danger.

Princes are like to heavenly bodies; which cause good or evil times; and which have much veneration, but no rest. All precepts concerning Kings, are in effect comprehended in those two remembrances: “Remember that thou art a man;” and “Remember that thou art as God, or God’s vicegerent:” the one bridleth their power, and the other their will.

Of Counsel.

The greatest trust between man and man, is the trust of giving counsel: for in other confidences men commit the parts of life, their lands, their goods, their children, their credit, some particular affair: but to such as they make their counsellors, they commit the whole, by how much the more they are obliged to all faith and integrity. The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. God himself is not without, but hath made it one of the great names of his blessed Son: the Counsellor. Solomon hath pronounced, “that in counsel is stability.” Things will have their first or second agitation; if they be not tossed upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tossed upon the waves of fortune, and be full of inconstancy, doing and undoing, like the reeling of a drunken man. Solomon's son found the force of counsel, as his father saw the necessity of it. For the beloved kingdom of God was first rent and broken by ill Counsel; upon which counsel there are set for instruction the two marks, whereby bad Counsel is for ever best discerned; that it was young Counsel for the persons, and violent Counsel for the matter.

The antient times do set forth in figure, both the incorporation and inseparable conjunction of Counsel with kings, and the wise and the politic use of Counsel by kings; the one, in that they say, Jupiter did marry Metis, which signifieth Counsel, whereby they intend that Sovereignty is married to Counsel; the other, in that which followeth, which was thus:—They say, after Jupiter was married to Metis, she conceived by him, and was with child: but Jupiter suffered her not to stay till she brought forth, but eat her up; whereby he became himself with child, and was delivered of Pallas Armed, out of his head: which monstrous fable containeth a secret of empire, how kings are to make use of their Council of State. That first they ought to refer matters unto them, which is the first be-getting or impregnation; but when they are eļa-borate, moulded, and shaped in the womb of their Council, and grow ripe, and ready to be brought forth, that then they suffer not their Council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them; but take the matter back into their own hands, and make it appear to the world, that the decrees and final directions (which, because they come forth with prudence and power, are resembled to Pallas Armed) proceeded from themselves; and not only from their authority, but (the more to add reputation to themselves) from their head and device.

Let us now speak of the inconveniences of Counsel, and of the remedies. The inconveniences that have been noted in calling and using Counsel, are three: first, the revealing of affairs, whereby they become less secret. Secondly, the weakening of the authority of princes, as if they were less of themselves. Thirdly, the danger of being unfaithfully counselled, and more for the good of them that counsel, than of him that is counselled. For which inconveniences, the doctrine of Italy, and practice of France in some kings’ times, hath introduced Cabinet Councils: a remedy worse than the disease.

As to secrecy: princes are not bound to communicate all matters with all Counsellors, but may extract and select. Neither is it necessary, that he that consulteth what he should do, should declare what he will do. But let princes be aware, that the unsecreting of their affairs comes not from themselves. And as for Cabinet Councils, it may be their motto: "I am full of chinks," i.e. "I am full of channels by which secrets may transpire." One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. It is true, there be some affairs which require extreme secrecy, which will hardly go beyond one or two persons beside the king: neither are those Counsels unprosperous; for besides the secrecy, they commonly go on constantly in one spirit of direction without distraction. But then it must be a prudent king, such as is able to grind with a handmill; and those inward Counsellors had need also be wise men, and especially true and trusty to the king's ends; as it was with King Henry VII, of England, who in his greatest business imparted himself to none except it were to Morton and Fox.

For weakening of authority: the fable showeth the remedy. Nay, the majesty of kings is rather exalted than diminished, when they are in the chair of Counsel. Neither was there ever prince bereaved of his dependencies by his Counsel, except where there hath been either an over-greatness in one Counsellor, or an over-strict combination in divers, which are things soon found and holpen.
For the last inconvenience, that men will counsel with an eye to themselves: certainly, "he will not find faith upon earth," is meant of the nature of times, and not of all particular persons. There be that are in nature faithful and sincere, and plain and direct, not crafty and involved: let princes above all draw to themselves such natures. Besides, Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one Counsellor keepeth sentinel over another; so that if any do counsel out of faction, or private ends, it commonly comes to the king's ear. But the best remedy is, if princes know their Counsellors as well as their Counsellors know them: "The greatest virtue a prince can possess, is to know the characters of his Counsellors."

And on the other side, Counsellors should not be too speculative into their sovereign's person. The true composition of a Counsellor, is rather to be skilled in their master's business, than in his nature; for then he is like to advise him, and not to feed his humour. It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their Council, both separately and together. For private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reverend. In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in consort, men are more obnoxious to others humours: therefore it is good to take both. And of the inferior sort, rather in private; to preserve freedom; of the greater, rather in consort, to preserve respect. It is in vain for princes to take Counsel concerning matters, if they take no Counsel likewise concerning persons: for all matters are as dead images; and the life of the execution of affairs resteth in the good choice of persons. Neither is it enough to consult concerning persons, "according to their kinds," as in an idea or mathematical description, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the greatest errors are committed, and the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. It was truly said: "The best Counsellors are dead ones, namely, books:" books will speak plain when Counsellors blanch. Therefore it is good to be conversant in them, especially the books of such as themselves have been actors upon the stage.
OF COUNSEL.

The Councils at this day in most places are but familiar meetings, where matters are rather talked on than debated. And they run too swift to the order or act of Counsel. It were better, that in causes of weight, the matter were propounded one day, and not spoken till the next day: "There is wisdom in taking a night to consider." So was it done in the Commission of Union between England and Scotland, which was a grave and orderly assembly. I commend set days for petitions: for it gives both the suitors more certainty for their attendance, and it frees the meetings for matters of state, that they may "mind the especial business of the moment and no other." In choice of committees for ripening business for the Council, it is better to choose indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency, by putting in those that are strong on both sides. I commend also standing Commissions; as for trade, for treasure, for war, for suits, for some provinces: for where there be divers particular Councils, and but one Council of State (as it is in Spain), they are in effect no more than standing Commissions; save that they have greater authority. Let such as are to inform Councils out of their particular professions (as lawyers, seamen, mintmen, and the like) be first heard before Committees, and then, as occasion serves, before the Council. And let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour Councils, not to inform them. A long table, and a square table, or seats about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end in effect sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the Counsellors' opinions that sit lower. A king, when he presides in Council, let him beware how he opens his own inclination too much in that which he propoundeth; for else Counsellors will but take the wind of him, and, instead of giving free Counsel, sing him a song of "which they conceive will not displease." Fortune is like the market, where many times if you can stay a little, the price will fall. And again, it is sometimess like Sibylla's offer, which at first offereth the commodity at full, then consumeth part and part, and still holdeth up the price. For Occasion (as it is in the common verse) "turneth a bald noodle, after she hath presented her locks in front, and no hold taken;" or at least turneth the handle of the bottle first to be received, and after the belly, which is hard to clasp. There is surely no greater wisdom, than well to time the beginnings and onsets of things. Dangers are no more light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men, than forced them. Nay, it were better to meet some dangers half way, though they come nothing near, than to keep too long a watch upon their approaches; for if a man watch too long, it is odds he will fall asleep. On the other side, to be deceived with two long shadows, (as some have been, when the moon was low, and shone on their enemies' back) and so to shoot off before the time; or to teach dangers to come on, by overly buckling towards them, is another extreme. The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion (as we said) must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions.
to Argus with his hundred eyes, and the ends to Briareus with his hundred hands; first to watch, and then to speed. For the helmet of Pluto, which maketh the politic man go invisible, is secrecy in the counsel, and celerity in the execution.
For when things are once come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity; like the motion of a bullet in the air, which flieth so swift, as it outruns the eye.

Of Cunning.

We take Cunning for a sinister or crooked wisdom. And certainly there is great difference between a cunning man and a wise man, not only in point of honesty, but in point of ability. There be that can pack the cards, and yet cannot play well: so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Again, it is one thing to understand persons, and another thing to understand matters; for many are perfect in men’s humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business, which is the constitution of one that hath studied men more than books.
Such men are fitter for practice than for counsel:
and they are good but in their own alley; turn them to new men, and they have lost their aim:
so as the old rule to know a fool from a wise man,
"Send them both naked before strangers, and then you will see what they are," doth scarce hold for them. And because these Cunning Men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop.
OF CUNNING.

It is a point of Cunning to wait upon him with whom you speak, with your eye, as the Jesuits give it in precept: for there may be many wise men that have secret hearts and transparent countenances. Yet this would be done with a demure abasing of your eye sometimes, as the Jesuits also do use.

Another is, that when you have any thing to obtain of present dispatch, you entertain and amuse the party with whom you deal, with some other discourse, that he be not too much awake to make objections. I knew a Counsellor and Secretary, that never came to Queen Elizabeth of England with Bills to sign, but he would always first put her into some discourse of estate, that she might the less mind the Bills.

The like surprise may be made by moving things, when the party is in haste, and cannot stay to consider advisedly of that is moved.

If a man would cross a business, that he doubts some other would handsomely and effectually move, let him pretend to wish it well, and move it himself in such sort as may foil it.
OF CUNNING.

The breaking-off in the midst of that, one was about to say, as if he took himself up, breeds a greater appetite in him with whom you confer, to know more.

And because it works better, when any thing seemeth to be gotten from you by question, than if you offer it of yourself; you may lay a bait for a question, by showing another visage and countenance than you are wont: to the end, to give occasion for the party to ask, what the matter is of the change, as Nehemiah did: “And I had not before that time been sad before the king.”

In things that are tender and unpleasing, it is good to break the ice by some whose words are of less weight, and to reserve the more weighty voice to come in as by chance, so that he may be asked the question upon the other speech; as Narcissus did in relating to Claudius the marriage of Messalina and Silius.

In things that a man would not be seen in himself, it is a point of Cunning to borrow the name of the world, as to say: “The world says;” or, “There is a speech abroad.”

I knew one, that when he wrote a letter, he would put that which was most material in the postscript, as if it had been a by-matter.

I knew another, that when he came to have speech, he would pass over that he intended most, and go forth, and come back again and speak of it as a thing that he had almost forgot.

Some procure themselves to be surprised at such times as it is like the party that they work upon will suddenly come upon them, and to be found with a letter in their hand, or doing somewhat which they are not accustomed; to the end they may be opposed of those things, which of themselves they are desirous to utter.

It is a point of Cunning, to let fall those words in a man's own name, which he would have another man learn and use, and thereupon take advantage. I knew two that were competitors for the Secretary's place, in Queen Elizabeth's time, and yet kept good quarter between themselves, and would confer one with another upon the business; and one of them said: "That to be a Secretary in the declination of a monarchy, was a ticklish thing, and that he did not affect it:" the other straight caught up those words, and discoursed with divers of his friends, "that he had no reason to desire to be Secretary in the declining of a monarchy." The first man took hold of it, and found means it was told the Queen; who, hearing of a declination of a monarchy, took it so ill, as she would never after hear of the other's suit.

There is a Cunning, which we in England call,
"the turning of the cat in the pan:" which is, when that which a man says to another, he lays it as if another had said it to him; and, to say truth, it is not easy, when such a matter passed between two, to make it appear from which of them it first moved and began.

It is a way that some men have to glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, "This I did not," as Tigellinus did towards Burrhus: "That he did not entertain diverse and various hopes, but that he simply looked to the safety of the Emperor."

Some have in readiness so many tales and stories, as there is nothing they would insinuate, but they can wrap it into a tale, which serveth both to keep themselves more on guard, and make others carry it with more pleasure.

It is a good point of Cunning, for a man to shape the answer he would have in his own words and propositions; for it makes the other party stick the less.

It is strange how long some men will lie in wait to speak somewhat they desire to say, and how far about they will fetch, and how many other matters they will beat over to come near it: it is a thing of great patience, but yet of much use.

A sudden, bold, and unexpected question, doth many times surprise a man, and lay him open: like to him, that having changed his name, and walked in Paul's, another suddenly came behind him, and called him by his true name, whereat straight ways he looked back.
OF WISDOM FOR A MAN'S SELF.

But these small wares, and petty points of Cunning are infinite; and it were a good deed to make a list of them: for that nothing doth more hurt in a State, than that cunning men pass for wise.

But certainly some there are, that know the sorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it: like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room. Therefore you shall see them find out pretty looses in the conclusion, but are no ways able to examine or debate matters: and yet commonly they take advantage of their inability, and would be thought wits of direction. Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and (as we now say) putting tricks upon them, than upon the soundness of their own proceedings. But Solomon saith: "A wise man looketh straight to his steps, a fool turneth aside to craftiness."

OF WISDOM FOR A MAN'S SELF.

AN ant is a wise creature for itself, but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard or garden. And certainly men that are great lovers of themselves, waste the public. Divide with reason between self-love.
and society; and be so true to thyself, as thou be not false to others, especially to thy king and country. It is a poor centre of a man's actions, Himself. It is right Earth; for that only stands fast upon its own centre; whereas all things that have affinity with the Heavens, move upon the centre of another which they benefit. The referring of all to a man's self, is more tolerable in a sovereign prince: because themselves are not only themselves; but their good and evil is at the peril of the public fortune. But it is a desperate evil in a servant to a prince, or a citizen in a republic. For whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends, which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state: therefore let princes or states choose such servants as have not this mark; except they mean their service should be made but the accessory. That which maketh the effect more pernicious, is, that all proportion is lost; it were disproportion enough for the servants good, to be preferred before the masters; but yet it is a greater extreme, when a little good of the servant shall carry things against the great good of the masters. And yet that is the case of bad officers, treasurers, ambassadors, generals, and other false and corrupt servants, which set a bias upon their bowl, of their own petty ends and envies, to the overthrow of their masters' great and important affairs. And for the most part the good such servants receive, is after the model of their own fortune; but the hurt they sell for that good, is after the model of their masters' fortune. And certainly it is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, if it were but to roast their eggs: and yet these men many times hold credit with their masters, because their study is but to please them, and profit themselves; and for either respect they will abandon the good of their affairs.

Wisdom for a man's self is in many branches thereof a depraved thing. It is the wisdom of rats, that will be sure to leave the house some time before it fall. It is the wisdom of the fox, that thrusts out the badger, who digged and made room for him. It is the wisdom of crocodiles, that shed tears when they would devour. But that which is specially to be noted, is, that those which (as Cicero says of Pompey) are "self-lovers without rivals," are many times unfortunate. And whereas they have all their time sacrificed to themselves, they become in the end themselves sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned.
Of Innovation.

As the births of living creatures at first are ill-shapen, so are all Innovations, which are the births of time. Yet notwithstanding, as those that first bring honour into their family, are commonly more worthy than most that succeed; so the first precedent (if it be good) is seldom attained by imitation. For ill to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion, strongest in continuance. But good, as a forced motion, strongest at first. Surely every medicine is an Innovation; and he that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils: for time is the greatest Innovator. And if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? It is true, that what is settled by custom, though it be not good, yet at least it is fit. And those things which have long gone together, are as it were confederate within themselves, whereas new things piece not so well: but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconformity. Besides, they are like strangers, more admired, and less favoured. All this is true, if time stood still; which contrariwise moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing, as an Innovation: and they that reverence too much old times, are but a scorn to the new. It were good, therefore, that men in their Innovations would follow the example of time itself; which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived: for otherwise whatsoever is new, is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others: and he that is holpen, takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt, for a wrong, and imputeth to the author. It is good also, not to try experiments in States, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility be evident; and well to beware, that it be the reformation that draweth on the change, and not the desire of change that pretendeth the reformation. And lastly, that the novelty, though it be not rejected, yet be held for a suspect; and, as the Scripture saith; "That we make a stand upon the ancient way, and then look about us, and discover what is the strait and right way, and so to walk in it."

Of Dispatch.

Affected Dispatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. It is like that which the physicians call pre-digestion, or hasty digestion, which is sure to fill the body full of crudities, and secret seeds of diseases. Therefore measure not Dispatch by the times of sitting, but by the advancement of the business. And as in races, it is not the large stride, or high lift, that makes the speed; so in business, the keeping close to the matter, and not taking of it too much at once, procureth Dispatch. It is the care of some only to come off speedily for the time, or to contrive some false periods of business, because they may seem men of Dispatch. But it is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off; and business so handled at several sittings or meetings, goeth commonly backward or forward in an unsteady manner. I knew a wise man, that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion: "Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner."

On the other side, true Dispatch is a rich thing. For time is the measure of business, as money is of wares; and business is bought at a dear hand, where there is small Dispatch. The Spartans and Spaniards have been noted to be of small Dispatch: "Mi venga la muerte de Spagna," "Let my death come from Spain, for then it will be sure to be long in coming."

Give good hearing to those that give the first information in business; and rather direct them in the beginning, than interrupt them in the continuance of their speeches: for he that is put out of his own order, will go forward and backward, and be more tedious while he waits upon his memory, than he could have been, if he had gone on in his own course. But sometimes it is seen, that the Moderator is more troublesome than the Actor.

Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech as it is coming forth. Long and curious speeches are as fit for Dispatch, as a robe or mantle with a long train is for a race.

Prefaces, and passages, and excuses, and other speeches of reference to the person, are great wasters of time; and though they seem to proceed of modesty, they are bravery. Yet beware of being too material, when there is any impediment or obstruction in men's wills; for pre-occupation of mind ever requireth preface of speech, like a fo-mentation to make the unguent enter.

Above all things, order, and distribution, and singling out of parts is the life of Dispatch, so as the distribution be not too subtile; for he that doth not divide, will never enter well into business: and he that divideth too much, will never come out of it clearly. To choose time, is to save time; and an unseasonable motion, is but beating the air. There be three parts of business; the preparation, the debate or examination, and the perfection; whereof if you look for Dispatch, let the middle only be the work of many, and the first and last the work of few. The proceeding upon somewhat conceived in writing, doth for the most part facilitate Dispatch: for though it should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction, than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than Dust.

Of Seeming Wise.

It hath been an opinion, that the French are wiser than they seem, and the Spaniards seem wiser than they are. But howsoever it be between nations, certainly it is so between man and man. For as the Apostle saith of Godliness, "Having a show of Godliness, but denying the power thereof;" so certainly there are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly;
"Much ado about nothing." It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satire, to persons of judgment, to see what shifts these formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem body, that hath depth and bulk. Some are so close reserved, as they will not show their wares but by a dark light; and seem always to keep back somewhat:
and when they know within themselves, they speak of that they do not well know, would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Some help themselves with countenance and gesture, and are wise by signs; as Cicero saith of Piso, that when he answered him, he fetched one of his brows up to his forehead, and bent the other down to his chin: "You answer—whilst one eye-brow is lifted up to your forehead, and the other is drawn down to your chin—that cruelty is not pleasing to you." Some think to bear it, by speaking a great word, and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance that which they cannot make good. Some, whatsoever is beyond their reach, will seem to despise or make light of it, as impertinent or curious, and so will have their ignorance seem judgment. Some are never without a difference, and commonly by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch the matter; of whom A. Gellius saith, "The man is mad, who by quibbling about the minutiae of words destroys the weight of facts." Of which kind also Plato in his Protagoras bringeth in Prodicus in scorn, and maketh him make a speech, that consisteth of distinctions from the beginning to the end. Generally such men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties: for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requireth a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. To conclude, there is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Seeming Wise Men may make shift to get opinion, but let no man choose them for employment; for certainly you were better take for business a man somewhat absurd, than over-formal.
OF FRIENDSHIP.

OF Friendship.

IT had been hard for him that spake it, to have put more truth and untruth together in few words, than in that speech, "Whosoever is delighted in solitude, is either a wild beast, or a god." For it is most true, that a natural and secret hatred, and aversion towards society in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast; but it is most untrue, that it should have any character at all of the Divine nature, except it proceed not out of a pleasure in solitude, but out of a love and desire to sequester a man's self for a higher conversation; such as is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathen, as Epimenides the Candian, Numa the Roman, Empedocles the Sicilian, and Apollo-nius of Tyana; and truly and really in divers of the ancient hermits, and holy fathers of the Church.
OF FRIENDSHIP.

But little do men perceive what solitude is, and how far it extendeth: for a crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures, and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love. The Latin adage meeteth with it a little, "A great city is a great solitude;" because in a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship, for the most part, which is in less neighbourhoods. But we may go further, and affirm most truly, that it is a mere and miserable solitude to want friends, without which the world is but a wilderness: and even in this sense also of solitude, whosoever in the frame of his nature and affections is unfit for Friendship, he taketh it of the beast, and not from humanity.

A principal fruit of Friendship is, the ease and discharge of the fulness and swellings of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. We know diseases of stoppings and suffocations are the most dangerous in the body, and it is not much otherwise in the mind; you may take sarza to open the liver, steel to open the spleen, flower of sulphur for the lungs, castoreum for the brain; but no receipt openeth the heart, but a true Friend, to whom you may impart griefs, joys, fears, hopes, suspicions, counsels, and whatsoever lieth upon the heart to oppress it, in a kind of civil shrift or confession.

It is a strange thing to observe, how high a rate great kings and monarchs do set upon this fruit of Friendship whereof we speak; so great, as they purchase it many times at the hazard of their own safety and greatness. For princes, in regard of the distance of their fortune from that of their subjects and servants, cannot gather this fruit, except (to make themselves capable thereof) they raise some persons to be, as it were, companions, and almost equals to themselves, which many times sorteth to inconvenience. The modern languages give unto such persons the name of favourites or privadoes, as if it were matter of grace or conversation. But the Roman name attaineth the true use and cause thereof, naming them "Partakers of our cares;" for it is that which tieth the knot. And we see plainly that this hath been done, not by weak and passionate princes only, but by the wisest and most politic that ever reigned; who have oftentimes joined to themselves some of their servants, whom both themselves have called Friends, and allowed others likewise to call them in the same manner, using the word which is received between private men.

L. Sylla, when he commanded Rome, raised Pompey (after surnamed the Great) to that height, that Pompey vaunted himself for Sylla's over-match: for when he had carried the consulship for a friend of his against the pursuit of Sylla, and that Sylla did a little resent thereat, and began to speak great, Pompey turned upon him again, and in effect bad him be quiet; "For that more men adored the sun-rising than the sun-setting." With Julius, Decimus Brutus had obtained that interest, as he set him down in his testament, for heir in remainder after his nephew. And this was the man that had power with him, to draw him forth to his death. For when Cæsar would have discharged the senate, in regard of some ill presages, and specially a dream of Calpurnia; this man lifted him gently by the arm out of his chair, telling him, he hoped he would not dismiss the senate, till his wife had dreamed a better dream. And it seemeth his fa-vour was so great, as Antonius in a letter, which is recited "word for word" in one of Cicero’s Philippics, called him venefica, "witch;" as if he had enchanted Cæsar. Augustus raised Agrippa (though of mean birth) to that height, as when he consulted with Mæcenas about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mæcenas took the liberty to tell him, "That he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great." With Tiberius Cæsar, Sejanus had ascended to that height, as they two were termed and reckoned as a pair of Friends. Tiberius in a letter to him saith, "Out of regard to our Friend-ship, I have not concealed these matters;" and the whole senate dedicated an altar to Friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearness of Friendship between them two. The like or more was between Septimius Severus and Plantianus: for he forced his eldest son to marry the daughter of Plantianus, and would maintain Plantianus in doing affronts to his son, and did write also in a letter to the senate these words; "I love the man so well, as I wish he may over-love me." Now if these princes had been as a Trajan, or a Marcus Aurelius, a man might have thought, that this had proceeded of an abundant goodness of nature; but being men so wise, of such strength and severity of mind, and so extreme lovers of themselves, as all these were; it proveth most plainly, that they found their own felicity (though as great as ever happened to mortal men) but as an half piece, except they might have a Friend to make it entire; and yet, which is more, they were princes that had wives, sons, nephews, and yet all these could not supply the comfort of Friendship.

It is not to be forgotten, what Commineus observeth of his master, Duke Charles the Hardy; namely, "That he would communicate his secrets with none; and least of all those secrets which troubled him most." Whereupon he goeth on, and saith, that towards his latter time, "That closeness did impair, and a little perish his understanding."
OF FRIENDSHIP.

Surely, Comminus might have made the same judgment also, if it had pleased him, of his second master, Lewis the Eleventh, whose closeness was indeed his tormentor. The parable of Pythagoras is dark, but true, Cor ne edito, "Eat not the heart." Certainly if a man would give it a hard phrase, those that want Friends to open themselves unto, are cannibals of their own hearts. But one thing is most admirable, (wherewith I will conclude this first fruit of Friendship,) which is, that this communicating of a man's self to his friend, works two contrary effects; for it redoubleth joys, and cutteth grieves in halves: for there is no man that imparteth his joys to his Friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man that imparteth his grieves to his Friend, but he grieveth the less. So that it is in truth of operation upon a man's mind of like virtue, as the Alchemists use to attribute to their stone for man's body, that it worketh all contrary effects, but still to the good and benefit of nature: but yet, without praying in aid of alchemists, there is a manifest image of this in the ordinary course of nature: for in bodies union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression; and even so it is of minds.

The second fruit of Friendship is healthful and sovereign for the understanding, as the first is for the affections: for Friendship maketh indeed a fair day in the affections from storm and tempests; but it maketh day-light in the understanding, out of darkness and confusion of thoughts. Neither is this to be understood only of faithful counsel which a man receiveth from his Friend; but before you come to that, certain it is, that whosoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another; he tosseth his thoughts more easily, he marshalleth them more orderly, he seeth how they look when they are turned into words. Finally, he waxeth wiser than himself; and that more by an hour's discourse, than by a day's meditation. It was well said by Themistocles to the King of Persia; "That speech was like cloth of Arras opened and put abroad; whereby the imagery doth appear in figure, whereas in thoughts they lie but as in packs." Neither is this second fruit of Friendship, in opening the understanding, restrained only to such Friends as are able to give a man counsel (they indeed are best); but even without that a man learneth of himself, and bringeth his own thoughts to light, and wheteth his wits as against a stone, which itself cuts not. In a word, a man were better relate himself to a statue or picture, than to suffer his thoughts to pass in smother.
And now, to make this second fruit of Friendship complete, that other point which lieth more open, and falleth within vulgar observation, which is faithful counsel from a Friend. Heraclitus saith well in one of his enigmas; "Dry light is ever the best." And certain it is, that the light that a man receiveth by counsel from another, is drier and purer than that which cometh from his own understanding and judgment, which is ever infused and drenched in his affections and customs; so as there is as much difference between the counsel that a Friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend, and of a flatterer: for there is no such flatterer, as in a man's self; and there is no such remedy against flattery of a man's self, as the liberty of a Friend. Counsel is of two sorts; the one concerning manners, the other concerning business. For the first; the best preservative to keep the mind in health, is the faithful admonition of a Friend. The calling of a man's self to a strict account is a medicine sometimes too piercing and corrosive. Reading good books of morality, is a little flat and dead. Observing our faults in others, is sometimes unproper for our case. But the best receipt (best, I say, to work, and best to take) is the admonition of a Friend. It is a strange thing to behold, what gross errors, and extreme absurdities, many (especially of the greater sort) do commit, for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune: for, as St. James saith, they are as men "that look sometimes into a glass, and presently forget their own shape and favour." As for business, a man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on; or that a man in anger is as wise as he, that hath said over the four-and-twenty letters; or that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; and such other fond and high imaginations, to think himself all in all. But when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight; and if any man think that he will take counsel, but it shall be by pieces, asking counsel in one business of one man, and in another business of another man, it is well, (that is to say, better perhaps than if he asked none at all): but he runneth two dangers; one, that he shall not faithfully be counselled; for it is a rare thing, except it be from a perfect and entire friend, to have counsel given, but such as shall be bowed and crooked to some ends, which he hath that giveth it. The other, that he shall have counsel given, hurtful and unsafe, (though with good meaning) and mixed; partly of mischief, and partly of remedy: even as if you would call a physician, that is thought good, for the cure of the disease you complain of, but is unacquainted with your body; and therefore may put you in a way for present cure, but overthroweth your health in some other kind, and so cure the disease, and kill the patient. But a friend that is wholly acquainted with a man's estate, will beware, by furthering any present business, how he dasheth upon other inconvenience; and therefore rest not upon scattered counsels, for they will rather distract and mislead, than settle and direct.

After these two noble fruits of Friendship, (peace in the affections, and support of the judgment) followeth the last fruit, which is like the pomegranate, full of many kernels; I mean aid, and bearing a part in all actions and occasions. Here the best way to represent to the life the manifold use of Friendship, is to cast and see how many things there are, which a man cannot do himself; and then it will appear, that it was a sparing speech of the antients to say: "that a friend is far more than himself." Men have their time, and die many times in desire of some things, which they principally take to heart; the bestowing of a child, the finishing of a work, or the like. If a man have a true friend, he may rest almost secure, that the care of those things will continue after him: so that a man hath as it were two lives in his desires. A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where Friendship is, all offices of life are as it were granted to him and his deputy: for he may exercise them by his friend. How many things are there, which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce alledge his own merits with modesty, much less extol them; a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg; and a number of the like. But all these things are graceful in a friend's mouth, which are blushing in a man's own. So again, a man's person hath many proper relations, which he cannot put off. A man cannot speak to his son, but as a father; to his wife, but as a husband; to his enemy but upon terms: whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. But to enumerate these things were endless; I have given the rule—Where a man cannot fitly play his own part; if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage.

Of Expense.

Riches are for spending, and spending for honour and good actions; therefore extraordinary expense must be limited by the worth of the occasion. For voluntary undoing may be as well for a man's country, as for the kingdom of Heaven; but ordinary Expense ought to be limited by a man's estate, and governed with such regard, as it be within his compass, and not subject to deceit and abuse of servants, and ordered to the best show, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Certainly, if a man will keep but of even hand, his ordinary Expences ought to be but to the half of his receipts; and, if he think to wax rich, but to the third part. It is no baseness for the greatest to descend and look into their own estate. Some forbear it; not upon negligence alone, but doubting to bring themselves into melancholy, in respect they shall find it broken: but wounds cannot be cured without searching. He that cannot look into his own estate at all, had need both choose well those whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtile. He that can look into his estate but seldom, it behoveth him to turn all to certainties. A man had need, if he be plentiful in some kind of expense, to be as saving again in some other: as, if he be plentiful in diet, to be saving in apparel; if he be plentiful in the hall, to be saving in the stable, and the like. For he that is plentiful in Expences of all kinds, will hardly be preserved from decay. In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long. For hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageous as interest. Besides, he that clears at once, will re-lapse; for finding himself out of straits, he will revert to his customs: but he that cleareth by degrees, induceth a habit of frugality, and gaineth as well upon his mind as upon his estate. Certainly, who hath a state to repair, may not despise small things: and commonly it is less dishonourable to abridge petty charges, than to stoop to petty gettings. A man ought warily to begin charges, which once begun will continue; but in matters that return not, he may be more magnificent.

Of the true Greatness of Kingdoms and Estates.

The speech of Themistocles the Athenian, which was haughty and arrogant, in taking so much to himself, had been a grave and wise observation and censure, applied at large to others: desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said, "He could not fiddle, but yet he could make a small town a great city." These words (holpen a little with a metaphor) may express two differing abilities in those that deal in business of estate. For if a true survey be taken of counsellors and statesmen, there may be found (though rarely) those which can make a small state great, and yet cannot fiddle: as, on the other side, there will be found a great many that can fiddle very cunningly, but yet are so far from being able to make a small state great, as their gift lieth the other way, to bring a great and flourishing estate to ruin and decay. And certainly those degenerate arts and shifts, whereby many counsellors and governors gain both favour with their masters, and estimation with the vulgar, deserve no better name than fiddling; being things rather pleasing for the time, and graceful to themselves only, than tending to the weal and advancement of the state which they serve. There are also, no doubt, counsellors and governors which may be held sufficient (negotiis pares) able to manage affairs, and to keep them from precipices, and manifest inconveniences, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate in power, means, and fortune. But be the workmen what they may be, let us speak of the work; that is, the true Greatness of Kingdoms and Estates, and the means thereof. An argument fit for great and mighty Princes to have in their hand, to the end that neither by overmeasuring their forces, they leese themselves in vain enterprises; nor on the other side, by undervaluing them, they descend to fearful and pusillanimous counsels.

The Greatness of an Estate in bulk and territory, doth fall under measure; and the Greatness of Finances and Revenue, doth fall under computation. The population may appear by muster.
and the number and greatness of cities and towns by oards and maps. But yet there is not any thing among civil affairs more subject to error, than the right valuation, and true judgment, concerning the power and forces of an Estate.

The Kingdom of Heaven is compared not to any great kernel or nut, but to a grain of mustard-seed; which is one of the least grains, but hath in it a property and spirit hastily to get up and spread. So are there states great in territory, and yet not apt to enlarge or command; and some that have but a small dimension of stem, and yet apt to be the foundations of great monarchies.

Walled towns, stored arsenals and armouries, goodly races of horse, chariots of war, elephants, ordnance, artillery, and the like—all this is but a sheep in a lion’s skin, except the breed and disposition of the people be stout and warlike. Nay, number (itself) in armies importeth not much, where the people is of weak courage: for, (as Virgil saith) “it never troubles a wolf, how many the sheep be.” The army of the Persians, in the plains of Arbela, was such a vast sea of people, as it did somewhat astonish the commanders in Alexander’s army; who came to him therefore, and wished him to set upon them by night; but he answered, “He would not pilfer the victory:” and the defeat was easy. When Tigranes the Armenian, being encamped upon a hill with 400,000 men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above 14,000 marching towards him, he made himself merry with it, and said, "Yonder men are too many for an embassage, and too few for a fight:" but before the sun set, he found them enough to give him the chase with infinite slaughter. Many are the examples of great odds between number and courage; so that a man may truly make a judgment, that the principal point of Greatness in any State, is, to have a race of military men. Neither is money the sinews of war (as it is trivially said), where the sinews of men's arms in base and effeminate people are failing. For Solon said well to Cræsus, (when in ostentation he showed him his gold) "Sir, if any other come, that hath better iron than you, he will be master of all this gold." Therefore let any Prince or State think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be of good and valiant soldiers. And let princes on the other side, that have subjects of martial disposition, know their own strength, unless they be otherwise wanting unto themselves. As for mercenary forces (which is the help in this case), all examples show, that whatsoever Estate or Prince doth rest upon them, "he may spread his feathers for a time, but he will mew them soon after."

The blessing of Juda and Isachar will never meet, "That the same people or nation should be both the lion's whelp, and ass between burthens:" neither will it be, that a people over-laid with taxes, should ever become valiant and martial. It is true, that taxes levied by consent of the state, do abate men's courage less, as it hath been seen notably in the excises of the Low Countries; and in some degree, in the subsidies of England: for you must note, that we speak now of the heart, and not of the purse. So that although the same tribute and tax, laid by consent, or by imposing, be all one to the purse, yet it works diversely upon the courage: so that you may conclude, "that no people overcharged with tribute, is fit for empire."
OF THE TRUE GREATNESS

Let States that aim at Greatness take heed how their nobility and gentlemen do multiply too fast. For that maketh the common subject grow to be a peasant, and base swain, driven out of heart, and in effect but a gentleman's labourer: even as you may see in coppice woods. "If you leave your staddles too thick, you shall never have clean underwood, but shrubs and bushes." So in countries, if the gentlemen be too many, the commons will be base: and you will bring it to that, that not the hundred poll will be fit for an helmet; especially as to the infantry, which is the nerve of an army: and so there will be great population and little strength. This which I speak of, hath been no where better seen, than by comparing of England and France; whereof England, though far less in territory and population, hath been nevertheless an overmatch; in regard the middle people of England make good soldiers, which the peasants of France do not. And herein the device of King Henry the Seventh (whereof I have spoken largely in the history of his life) was profound and admirable, in making farms and houses of husbandry, of a standard; that is, maintained with such a proportion of land unto them, as may breed a subject to live in convenient plenty, and no servile condition; and to keep the plough in the hands of the owners and not mere hirelings. And thus indeed you shall attain to Virgil’s character which he gives to ancient Italy:

“A land powerful in arms, and formed for fertility of soil.”

Neither is that state (which, for any thing I know, is almost peculiar to England, and hardly to be found any where else, except it be perhaps in Poland) to be passed over—I mean the state of free servants and attendants upon noblemen and gentlemen, which are no ways inferior to the yeomanry for arms: and therefore, out of all question, the splendour and magnificence, and great retinues, and hospitality of noblemen and gentlemen received into custom, doth much conduce unto martial greatness: whereas, contrariwise, the close and reserved living of noblemen and gentlemen, causeth a penury of military forces.

By all means it is to be procured, that the trunk of Nebuchadnezzar's tree of monarchy be great enough to bear the branches and the boughs; that is, that the natural subjects of the Crown or State bear a sufficient proportion to the stranger subjects that they govern. Therefore all States that are liberal of naturalization towards strangers, are fit for empire. For to think that a handful people can, with the greatest courage and policy in the world, embrace too large extent of dominion, it may hold for a time, but it will fail suddenly. The Spartans were a nice people in point of naturalization; whereby, while they kept their compass, they stood firm; but when they did spread, and their boughs were become too great for their stem, they became a windfall upon the sudden. Never any state was in this point so open to receive strangers into their body, as were the Romans; therefore it sorteth with them accordingly, for they grew to the greatest monarchy. Their manner was to grant naturalization (which they called "the right or freedom of the city"), and to grant it in the highest degree; that is, not only "the right of exercising commerce, the right of marrying a citizen, the right of inheritance," but also "the right of voting," and "the right of receiving honours." And this not to singular persons alone, but likewise to whole families; yea, to cities, and sometimes to nations. Add to this their custom of plantation of colonies, whereby the Roman plant was removed into the soil of other nations; and putting both constitutions together, you will say, that it was not the Romans that spread upon the world, but it was the world that spread upon the Romans; and that was the sure way of Greatness. I have marvelled sometimes at Spain, how they clasp and contain so large dominions with so few natural Spaniards: but sure the whole compass of Spain is a very great body of a tree, far above Rome and Sparta at the first: and besides, though they have not had that usage to naturalize liberally, yet they have that which is next to it; that is, to employ, almost indifferently, all nations in their militia of ordinary soldiers: yea, and sometimes in their highest commands. Nay, it seemeth at this instant, they are sensible of this want of natives, as by the Pragmatical Sanction, now published, appeareth.

It is certain, that sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, (that require rather the finger, than the arm) have in their nature a contrariety to a military disposition. And generally all warlike people are a little idle, and love danger better than travail: neither must they be too much broken of it, if they shall be preserved in vigour. Therefore it was great advantage in the ancient states of Sparta, Athens, Rome, and others, that they had the use of slaves, which commonly did rid those manufactures: but that is abolished, in greatest part, by the Christian law. That which cometh nearest to it, is, to leave those arts chiefly to strangers (which for that purpose are the more easily to be received), and to contain the principal bulk of the vulgar natives within those three kinds; tillers of the ground, free servants, and handicrafts-men of strong and manly arts; as smiths, masons, carpenters, &c. not reckoning professed soldiers.

But above all, for Empire and Greatness it importeth most, that a nation do profess arms as their principal honour, study, and occupation: for the things which we formerly have spoken of, are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation, without intention and act? Romulus, after his death, (as they report or feign) sent a present to the Romans, that above all they should intend arms, and then they should prove the greatest Empire of the world. The fabric of the state of Sparta was wholly (though not wisely) framed and composed to that scope and end. The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. The Gauls, Germans, Goths, Saxons, Normans, and others, had it for a time. The Turks have it at this day, though in great declination. Of Christian Europe, they that have it, are in effect only the Spaniards. But it is so plain, "that every man profiteth in that he most intendeth," that it needeth not to be stood upon. It is enough to point at it, that no nation which doth not directly profess arms, may look to have Greatness fall into their mouths. And on the other side, it is a most certain oracle of time, that those States that continue long in that profession (as the Romans and Turks principally have done) do wonders; and those that have professed arms but for an age, have notwithstanding commonly attained that greatness in that age, which maintained them long after, when their profession and exercise of arms hath grown to decay.
OF KINGDOMS AND STATES. 119

Incident to this point is, for a State to have those laws or customs which may reach forth unto them just occasions (as may be pretended) of war: for there is that justice imprinted in the nature of men, that they enter not upon wars (whereof so many calamities do ensue) but upon some, or at least specious grounds and quarrels. The Turk hath at hand, for cause of war, the propagation of his law or sect, a quarrel that he may always command. The Romans, though they esteemed the extending the limits of their Empire to be great honour to their generals, when it was done; yet they never rested upon that alone to begin a war. First, therefore, let nations that pretend to Greatness, have this—that they be sensible of wrongs, either upon borderers, merchants, or politic ministers; and that they sit not too long upon a provocation. Secondly, let them be pressed, and ready to give aids and succours to their confederates; as it ever was with the Romans: insomuch as if the confederate had leagues defensive with divers other States, and, upon invasion offered, did implore their aids severally; yet the Romans would ever be the foremost, and leave it to none other to have the honour. As for the wars which were ancienytly made on the behalf of a kind of party, or tacit conformity of estate, I do not well see, how they may be well justified: as when the Romans made a war for the liberty of Græcia; or when the Lacedæmonians and Athenians made wars to set up or pull down democracies and oligarchies; or when wars were made by foreigners, under the pretence of justice or protection, to deliver the subjects of others from tyranny and oppression, and the like. Let it suffice, that no Estate expect to be great, that is not awake, upon any just occasion of arming.

No body can be healthful without exercise, neither natural body nor politic; and certainly to a Kingdom or Estate, a just and honourable war is the true exercise. A civil war indeed is like the heat of a fever: but a foreign war is like the heat of ex-exercise, and serveth to keep the body in health: for in a slothful peace, both courages will effeminate, and manners corrupt. But howsoever it be for happiness, without all question, for Greatness, it maketh to be still, for the most part, in arms; and the strength of a veteran army (though it be a chargeable business) always on foot, is that which commonly giveth the law, or at least the reputation amongst all neighbour States; as may well be seen in Spain, which hath had in one part or other a veteran army, almost continually, now by the space of six-score years.

- To be master of the sea, is an abridgment of a monarchy. Cicero writing to Atticus, of Pompey his preparation against Cæsar, saith: "The design of Pompey is plainly the same as was that of Themistocles; for he thinks that he who obtains the dominion of the sea, must have dominion over every thing else." And without doubt Pompey had tired out Cæsar, if upon vain confidence he had not left that way. We see the great effects of battles by sea. The battle of Actium decided the empire of the world. The battle of Lepanto arrested the greatness of the Turk. There be many examples, where sea-fights have been final to the war; but this is when Princes or States have set up their rest upon the battles. But thus much is certain, that he that commands the sea, is at great
OF THE TRUE GREATNESS

verty, and may take as much, and as little of the ar, as he will; whereas those that be strongest by and, are many times nevertheless in great straits.
Surely at this day, with us of Europe, the vantage of strength at sea (which is one of the principal dowries of this kingdom of Great Britain) is great; both because most of the kingdoms of Europe are not merely in land, but girt with the sea, most part of their compass; and because the wealth of both Indies seems in great part but an accessory to the command of the seas.

The wars of latter ages seem to be made in the dark, in respect of the glory and honour which re-lected upon men from the wars in antient time.
There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, which nevertheless are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers; and some remembrance perhaps upon the scutcheon; and some hospitals for maimed soldiers, and such like things. But in antient times, the trophies erected upon the place of the victory; the funeral laudatives and monuments for those that died in the wars; the crowns and garlands personal; the style of Emperor, which the great king of the world after borrowed; the triumphs of the Generals upon their return; the great donatives and largesses upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to inflame all men’s courages. B
OF KINGDOMS AND ESTATES. 123

above all, that of the triumph amongst the Romans, was not pageants or gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was: for it contained three things; honour to the general; riches to the treasury out of the spoils; and donatives to the army. But that honour perhaps were not fit for monarchies, except it be in the person of the monarch himself, or his sons; as it came to pass in the times of the Roman Emperors, who did impropriate the actual triumphs to themselves, and their sons, for such wars as they did achieve in person; and left only for wars achieved by subjects, some triumphal garments and ensigns to the general.

To conclude: no man can, by care taking (as the Scripture saith) add a cubit to his stature, in this little model of a man's body: but in the great frame of Kingdoms and Commonwealths, it is in the power of Princes or Estates to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms. For by introducing such ordinances, constitutions, and customs, as we have now touched, they may sow Greatness to their posterity and succession. But these things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance.
Of Regimen of Health.

There is a wisdom in this beyond the rules of physic. A man's own observation what he finds good of, and what he finds hurt of, is the best physic to preserve Health: but it is a safer conclusion to say, "This agreth not well with me, therefore I will not continue it," than this, "I find no offence of this, therefore I may use it."

For strength of nature in youth passeth over many excesses which are owing a man till his age. Discern of the coming on of years, and think not to do the same things still; for age will not be defied. Beware of sudden change in any great point of diet; and if necessity enforce it, fit the rest to it; for it is a secret both in nature and state, that it is safer to change many things than one. Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like: and try, in any thing thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so as if thou dost find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again: for it is hard to distinguish that which is generally held good and wholesome, from that which is good particularly, and fit for thine own body. To be free minded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, and of sleep, and of exercise, is one of the best precepts for long life. As for the passions and studies of the mind; avoid envy, anxious fears, anger fretting inwards, subtile and knotty inquisitions, joys, and exhilarations in excess, sadness not communicated; entertain hopes, mirth rather than joy, variety of delights rather than surfeit of them, wonder and admiration, and therefore novelties, studies that fill the mind with splendid and illustrious objects, as histories, fables, and contemplations of nature. If you fly physic in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. If you make it too familiar, it will work no extraordinary effect when sickness cometh. I commend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of physic, except it be grown into a custom; for those diets alter the body more, and trouble it less. Despise no new accident in your body, but ask opinion of it. In sickness respect health principally, and in health, action: for those that put their bodies to endure in health, may in most sicknesses, which are not very sharp, be cured only with diet and tending. Celsus could never have spoken it as a physician, had he not been a wise man withall, when he giveth it for one of the great precepts of health and lasting, that a man do vary, and interchange contraries, but with an inclination to the more benign extreme. Use fasting and full eating, but rather full eating.
OF SUSPICION.

watching and sleep, but rather sleep; sitting and exercise, but rather exercise; and the like: so shall nature be cherished, and yet taught masteries. Physicians are some of them so pleasing, and conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art for the disease, as they respect not sufficiently the condition of the patient. Take one of a middle temper, or if it may not be found in one man, combine two of either sort; and forget not to call as well the best acquainted with your body, as the best reputed of for his faculty.

Of Suspicion.

Suspicions amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be repressed, or at least well guarded; for they cloud the mind, they leese friends, and they check with business, whereby business cannot go on current and constantly. They dispose kings to tyranny, husbands to jealousy, wise men to irresolution and melancholy. They are defects, not in the heart, but in the brain; for they take place in the stoutest natures: as in the example of Henry VII. of England, there was not a more suspicious man, nor a more stout; and in such a composition they do small hurt. For commonly they are not admitted, but with examination whether they be likely or no; but in fearful natures they gain ground too fast. There is nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little: and therefore men should remedy Suspicion, by procuring to know more, and not to keep their Suspicions in smother. What would men have? Do they think those they employ and deal with are saints? Do they not think they will have their own ends, and be truer to themselves than to them? Therefore there is no better way to moderate Suspicions, than to account upon such Suspicions as true, and yet to bridle them as false. For so far a man ought to make use of Suspicions, as to provide, as if that should be true that he suspects, yet it may do him no hurt. Suspicions that the mind of itself gathers are but buzzes; but Suspicions that are artificially nourished, and put into men's heads by the tales and whisperings of others, have stings. Certainly the best means to clear the way in this same wood of Suspicions, is frankly to communicate them with the party that he suspects; for thereby he shall be sure to know more of the truth of them than he did before; and withall, shall make that party more circumspect, not to give further cause of Suspicion. But this would not be done to men of base natures: for they, if they find themselves once suspected, will never be true. The Italians say: "Sospetto licentia fede;" as if Suspicion did give a passport to faith; but it ought rather to kindle it to discharge itself.
OF SUSPICION.

Of Discourse.

Some in their Discourse desire rather commendation of wit, in being able to hold all arguments, than of judgment in discerning what is true: as if it were a praise to know what might be said, and not what should be thought. Some have certain common places, and themes, wherein they are good, and want variety; which kind of poverty is for the most part tedious, and when it is once perceived, ridiculous. The honourablest part of talk, is to give the occasion, and again, to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. It is good, in discourse and speech of conversation, to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments, tales with reasons, asking of questions with telling of opinions, and jest with earnest: for it is a dull thing to tire, and, as we say now, to jade any thing too far. As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, great persons, any man's present business of importance, and any case that deserveth pity. Yet there be some that think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant, and to the quick; that is a vein which would be bridled.

"Spare, my son, the whip, and hold the reins tighter."

The words addressed to Phaëton.

And generally men ought to find the difference between saltness and bitterness. Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others' memory. He that questioneth much, shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh: for he shall give them occasion to please themselves in speaking, and himself shall continually gather knowledge. But let his questions not be troublesome; for that is fit for a poser: and let him be sure to leave other men their turns to speak. Nay, if there be any that would reign, and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and to bring others on, as musicians used to do with those that dance too long galliards. If you dissemble sometimes your knowledge of that you are thought to know, you shall be thought another time to know that you know not. Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom, and well chosen.
OF DISCOURSE.

I knew one was wont to say in scorn: "He must needs be a wise man, he speaks so much of himself:" and there is but one case, wherein a man may commend himself with good grace, and that is, in commending virtue in another, especially if it be such a virtue whereunto himself pretendeth. Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used: for Discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. I knew two noblemen of the West part of England, whereof the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at the other's table, "Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given:" to which the guest would answer, "Such and such a thing passed:" the lord would say, "I thought he would mar a good dinner." Discretion of speech is more than eloquence; and to speak agreeably to him with whom we deal, is more than to speak in good words, or in good order. A good continued speech without a good speech of interlocution, shows slowness; and a good reply, or second speech without a good-settled speech, showeth shallowness and weakness; as we see in beasts, that those that are weakest in the course, are yet nimblest in the turn; as it is betwixt the greyhound and the hare. To use too many circumstances ere one come to the matter, is wearisome: to use none at all, is blunt.
Of Plantations.

PLANTATIONS are amongst antient, primitive, and heroical works. When the world was young, it begat more children; but now it is old, it begets fewer: for I may justly account new Plantations to be the children of former kingdoms. I like a Plantation in a pure soil, that is, where people are not displanted, to the end to plant others; for else it is rather an extirpation, than a plantation. Planting of countries, is like planting of woods: for you must make account to leese almost twenty years profit, and expect your recompence in the end. For the principal thing that hath been the destruction of most Plantations, hath been the base and hasty drawing of profit in the first years. It is true, speedy profit is not to be neglected, as far as may stand with the good of the Plantation, but no further. It is a shameful and unblessed thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant: and not only so, but it spoileth the Plantation; for they will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and do mischief, and spend victuals, and be quickly weary; and then certify over to their country to the discredit of the Plantation. The people wherewith you plant, ought to be gardeners, ploughmen, labourers, smiths, carpenters, joiners, fishermen, fowlers, with some few apothecaries.
surgeons, cooks, and bakers. In a country of Plantation, first look about what kind of victual the country yields of itself to hand; as chesnuts, walnuts, pine-apples, olives, dates, plums, cherries, wild honey, and the like; and make use of them. Then consider what victual, or esculent things there are, which grow speedily, and within the year; as parsnips, carrots, turnips, onions, radish, artichokes of Jerusalem, maize, and the like. For wheat, barley, and oats; they ask too much labour; but with pease and beans you may begin, both because they ask less labour, and because they serve for meat as well as for bread. And of rice likewise cometh a great increase, and it is a kind of meat. Above all, there ought to be brought store of biscuit, oatmeal, flour, meal, and the like, in the beginning, till bread may be had. For beasts and birds, take chiefly such as are least subject to diseases, and multiply fastest; as swine, goats, cocks, hens, turkies, geese, house-doves, and the like. The victual in Plantations ought to be expended, almost as in a besieged town; that is, with a certain allowance; and let the main part of the ground employed to gardens or corn, be to a common stock, and to be laid in, and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion, besides some spots of ground that any particular person will manure for his own private use. Consider likewise what commodities the soil, where the Plantation is, doth naturally yield, that they may some way help to defray the charge of the Plantation: so it be not, as was said, to the untimely prejudice of the main business; as it hath fared with tobacco in Virginia.
Wood commonly aboundeth but too much, and therefore timber is fit to be one. If there be iron ore, and streams whereupon to set the mills, iron is a brave commodity where wood aboundeth.
Making of bay salt, if the climate be proper for it, would be put in experience. Growing silk likewise, if any be, is a likely commodity. Pitch and tar, where store of firs and pines are, will not fail. So drugs, and sweet woods, where they are, cannot but yield great profit. Soap-ashes likewise, and other things that may be thought of.
But moil not too much under ground; for the hope of mines is very uncertain, and useth to make the Planters lazy in other things. For Government, let it be in the hands of one assisted with some counsel; and let them have commission to exercise martial laws with some limitation. And above all, let men make that profit of being in the wilderness, as they have God always, and his service, before their eyes. Let not the government of the Plantation depend upon too many counsellors and undertakers in the country that planteth, but upon a temperate number; and let those be rather noblemen and gentlemen, than merchants: for they look ever to the present gain. Let there be freedoms for custom, till the Plantation be of strength; and not only freedom from custom, but freedom to carry their commodities where they make their best of them, except there be some special cause of caution. Cram not in people, by sending too fast, company after company; but rather hearken how they waste, and send supplies proportionably; but so as the number may live well in the Plantation, and not by surcharge be in penury. It hath been a great endangering to the health of some Plantations, that they have built along the sea and rivers in marish and unwholesome grounds. Therefore, though you begin there to avoid carriage, and other like discommodities, yet build still rather upwards from the streams, than along. It concerneth likewise the health of the Plantation, that they have good store of salt with them, that they may use it in their victuals, when it shall be necessary. If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and gingles, but use them justly and graciously, with sufficient guard nevertheless: and do not win their favour by helping them to invade their enemies; but for their defence it is not amiss. And send oft of them over to the country that plant, that they may see a better condition than their own, and commend it when they return. When the Plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant with women as well as with men, that the Plantation may spread into generations, and not be ever pieced from without. It is the sinfullest thing in the world to forsake or destitute a Plantation once in forwardness; for besides the dishonour, it is guiltiness of blood of many commiserable persons.
OF RICHES.

OF Riches.

I cannot call Riches better than the baggage of virtue. The Roman word is better, Impedimenta; for as the baggage is to an army, so are Riches to virtue. It cannot be spared, nor left behind, but it hindereth the march: yea, and the care of it sometimes loseth or disturbeth the victory. Of great Riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution, the rest is but conceit: so saith Solomon: "Where much is, there are many to consume it; and what hath the owner, but the sight of it with his eyes?" The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great Riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them; but no solid use to the owner. Do you not see what feigned prices are set upon little stones and rarities? And what works of ostentation are undertaken, because there might seem to be some use of great Riches? But then you will say, they may be of use to buy men out of dangers or troubles: as Solomon saith, "Riches are as a strong hold in the imagination of the rich man." But this is excellently expressed, that it is in imagination, and not always in fact: for certainly great Riches have sold more men than they have bought out. Seek not proud Riches, but such as thou mayest get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly: yet have no abstract nor friarly contempt of them, but distinguish, as Cicero saith well of Rabirius Posthumus; "It appeared that in his desire of enlarging his property, he did not look so much for gain to feed his avarice, as for the means or an instrument of doing good." Hearken also to Solomon, and beware of hasty gathering of Riches: "He that hasteneth to be rich, will scarcely be innocent." The poets feign, that when Plutus (which is Riches) is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent from Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot; meaning, that Riches gotten by good means, and just labour, pace slowly: but when they come by the death of others, (as by the course of inheritance, testaments, and the like) they come tumbling upon a man. But it might be applied likewise to Pluto, taking him for the Devil; for when Riches come from the Devil (as by fraud, and oppression, and unjust means), they come upon speed. The ways to enrich are many, and most of them foul; parsimony is one of the best, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality and charity. The improvement of the ground is the most natural obtaining of Riches; for it is our great mother's blessing, the earth's, but it is slow; and yet where men of great wealth do stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth Riches exceedingly. I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time: a great grazier; a great sheep-master, a great timberman, a great collier, a great corn-master, a great lead-man, and so of iron, and a number of the like points of husbandry; so as the earth seemed a sea to him in respect of the perpetual importation. It was truly observed by one, that himself came very hardly to a little Riches, and very easily to great Riches; for when a man's stock is come to that, that he can expect the prime of markets, and overcome those bargains, which for their greatness are few men's money, and be partner in the industries of younger men, he cannot but increase mainly. The gains of ordinary trades and vocations are honest, and furthered by two things, chiefly, by diligence, and by a good name for good and fair dealing. But the gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature, when men shall wait upon others' necessity, broke by servants and instruments.
draw them on, put off others cunningly that would be better chapmen, and the like practices which are crafty and naught. As for the chopping of bargains, when a man buys, not to hold, but to sell over again, that commonly grindeth double, both upon the seller and upon the buyer. Sharings do greatly enrich, if the hands be well chosen that are trusted. Usury is the certainest means of gain, though one of the worst; as that whereby a man doth eat his bread, "by the sweat of another's brow;" and, besides, doth plough upon Sundays. But yet, certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn. The fortune in being the first in an invention, or in a privilege, doth cause sometimes a wonderful overgrowth in Riches; as it was with the first sugar-man in the Canaries: therefore if a man can play the true logician, to have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters especially if the times be fit. He that resteth upon gains certain, shall hardly grow to great Richè and he that puts all upon adventures, doth often times break, and come to poverty: it is good therefore to guard adventures with certainties that uphold losses. Monopolies and co-emption wares for re-sale, where they are not restrained great means to enrich, especially if the party intelligence what things are like to come request, and to store himself before-hand. Riches gotten by service, though it be of the best rise, yet when they are gotten by flattery, feeding humours, and other servile conditions, they may be placed amongst the worst. As for fishing for testaments and executorships, (as Tacitus saith of Seneca, "Wills and orphans are caught as it were in a net") it is yet worse, by how much men submit themselves to meaner persons than in service.
Believe not much them that seem to despise Riches; for they despise them, that despair of them, and none worse when they come to them. Be not penny-wise: Riches have wings, and sometimes they fly away of themselves; sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more. Men leave their Riches either to their kindred, or to the public; and moderate portions prosper best in both. A great state left to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey, round about to seize on him, if he be not the better established in years and judgment. Likewise glorious gifts and foundations are like sacrifices without salt, and but the painted sepulchres of alms, which soon will putrefy and corrupt inwardly: therefore measure not thine advancements by quantity, but frame them by measure; and defer not charities till death: for certainly if a man weigh it rightly, he that doth so is rather liberal of another man's than of his own.
Of Prophecies.

I mean not to speak of Divine Prophecies, nor of heathen oracles, nor of natural predictions; but only of Prophecies that have been of certain memory, and from hidden causes. Saith the Pytho-nissa to Saul, "To-morrow thou and thy son shall be with me." Homer hath these verses:

"Through the wide world th' Ἔneian house shall reign,
And children's children shall the crown sustain."

Ἕνειδ 3. line 97. Dryden.

A Prophecy, as it seems, of the Roman Empire. Seneca, the tragedian, hath these lines: "An age shall come in future but late years, in which the ocean shall relax the present boundaries of things, and navigation shall discover new worlds, and Thule shall no longer be considered as the end of the land or world."

A Prophecy of the discovery of America. The daughter of Polycrates dreamed, that Jupiter bathed her father, and Apollo anointed him; and it came to pass that he was crucified in an open place, where the sun made his body run with sweat, and the rain washed it. Philip of Macedon dreamed he sealed up his wife's belly; whereby he did expound it, that his wife should be barren: but Aristander the soothsayer told him his wife was with child, because men do not use to seal vessels that are empty. A phantasm that appeared to M. Brutus in his tent, said to him: "You shall see me again at the battle of Philippi." Tiberius said to Galba: "And you too, Galba, shall taste of Empire," i.e. be Emperor. In Vespasian's time, there went a Prophecy in the East, that those that should come forth of Judea should reign over the world: which though it may be was meant of our Saviour, yet Tacitus expounds it of Vespasian. Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck: and indeed the succession that followed him for many years, made golden-times. Henry VI. of England, said of Henry VII. when he was a lad and gave him water, "This is the lad that shall enjoy the crown for which we strive." When I was in France, I heard from one Doctor Pena, that the queen mother, who was given to curious arts, caused the king her husband's nativity to be calculated under a false name: and the astrologer gave a judgment, that he should be killed in a duel; at which the queen laughed, thinking her husband to be above challenges and duels. But he was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff of Montgomery going in at his beaver. The trivial Prophecy that I heard when I was a child, and Queen Elizabeth was in the flower of her years, was:
OF PROPHECIES.

When Hempe is spun,
England's done.

Whereby it was generally conceived, that after the princes had reigned, which had the principal letters of that word Hempe, (which were Henry, Edward, Mary, Philip, and Elizabeth,) England should come to utter confusion; which, thanks be to God, is verified in the change of the name; for that the king's style is no more of England, but of Britain. There was also another Prophecy, before the year of 88, which I do not well understand:

There shall be seen upon a day,
Between the Baugh and the May,
The Black Fleet of Norway.
When that is come and gone,
England build houses of lime and stone,
For after wars shall you have none.

It was generally conceived to be meant of the Spanish Fleet that came in 88. For that the King of Spain's surname, as they say, is Norway. The Prediction of Regiomontanus,

"The 88th year shall be a year of wonders," was thought likewise accomplished, in the sending of that great Fleet, being the greatest in strength, though not in number, that ever swam upon the sea. As for Cleon's dream, I think it was a jest: it was, that he was devoured of a long dragon; and it was expounded of a maker of sausages that troubled him exceedingly. There are numbers of the like kind, especially if you include dreams and predictions of astrology. But I have set down these few only of certain credit for example. My judgment is, that they ought all to be despised, and ought to serve but for winter-talk by the fireside: though, when I say despised, I mean it as for belief: for otherwise, the spreading or publishing of them is in no sort to be despised; for they have done much mischief. And I see many severe laws made to suppress them. That that hath given them grace, and some credit, consisteth in three things: first, that men mark when they hit, and never mark when they miss; as they do generally also of dreams. The second is, that probable conjectures, or obscure traditions, many times turn themselves into Prophecies; while the nature of man, which coveteth divination, thinks it no peril to foretell that which indeed they do but collect: as that of Seneca's verse. For so much was then subject to demonstration, that the globe of the earth had great parts beyond the Atlantic; which might be probably conceived not to be all sea: and adding thereto, the tradition in Plato's Timæus, and his Atlanticus, it might encourage one to turn it to a Prediction. The third and last (which is the great one) is, that almost all of them, being infinite in number, have been impostures, and by idle and crafty brains merely contrived and feigned after the event past.

OF PROPHECIES.

Of Ambition.

Ambition is like Choler, which is an humour that maketh men active, earnest, full of alacrity, and stirring, if it be not stopped: but if it be stopped, and cannot have its way, it becometh adust, and thereby malign and venomous. So ambitious men, if they find the way open for their rising, and still get forward, they are rather busy than dangerous; but if they be checked in their desires, they become secretly discontent, and look upon men and matters with an evil eye, and are best pleased when things go backward; which is the worst property in a servant of a prince or state. Therefore it is good for princes, if they use ambitious men, to handle it so, as they be still progressive, and not retrograde; which, because it cannot be without inconvenience, it is good not to use such natures at all. For if they rise not with their service, they will take order to make their service fall with them. But since we have said, it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are of necessity. Good commanders in the wars must be taken, be they never so ambitious; for the use of their service dispenseth with the rest; and to take a soldier without Ambition, is to pull off his spurs. There is also great use of ambitious men, in being skreens to princes in matters of danger and envy: for no man will take that part, except he be like a seal'd dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him. There is use also of ambitious men, in pulling down the greatness of any subject that over-tops: as Tib erius used Macro in pulling down of Sejanus. Since therefore they must be used in such cases, there resteth to speak how they are to be bridled, that they may be less dangerous. There is less danger of them, if they be of mean birth, than they be noble: and if they be rather harsh of nature, than gracious and popular; and if they be rather new raised, than grown cunning and fortified in their greatness. It is counted by some a weakness in princes to have favourites: but it is of all others the best remedy against ambitious great ones. For when the way of pleasuring and displeasing lieth by the favourite, it is impossible any other should be over-great. Another means to curb them, is to balance them by others as proud as they. But then there must be some middle counsellors to keep things steady: for without that ballast the ship will roll too much. At the least, a prince may animate and inure some meaner persons, to be as it were scourges to ambitious men. As for the having of them obnoxious to ruin, if they be of fearful natures, it may do well; but if they be stout and daring, it may precipitate their designs, and prove dangerous. As for the pulling of them down, if the affairs require it, and that it may not be done with safety suddenly, the only way is, the interchange continually of favours and disgraces; whereby they may not know what to expect, and be as it were in a wood. Of Ambitions, it is less harmful the Ambition to prevail in great things, than that other to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and mars business. But yet it is less danger, to have an ambitious man stirring in business, than great in dependences. He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the public: but he that plots to be the only figure amongst cyphers, is the decay of an whole age. Honour hath three things in it: the vantage-ground to do good, the approach to kings and principal persons, and the raising of a man’s own fortunes. He that hath the best of these intentions when he aspireth, is an honest man; and that prince that can discern of these intentions in another that aspireth, is a wise prince. Generally, let princes and states choose such ministers as are more sensible of duty, than of rising; and such as love business rather upon conscience, than upon bravery; and let them discern a busy nature from a willing mind.
OF MASKS AND TRIUMPHS.

Of Masks and Triumphs.

These things are but toys, to come amongst such serious observations. But yet, since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daubed with cost. Dancing to song, is a thing of great state and pleasure. I understand it, that the song be in choir, placed aloft, and accompanied with some broken music, and the ditty fitted to the device. Acting in song, especially in dialogues, hath an extreme good grace; I say acting, not dancing, (for that is a mean and vulgar thing): and the voices of the dialogue would be strong and manly, (a base, and a tenor, no treble) and the ditty high and tragical, not nice or dainty. Several choirs placed one over against another, and taking the voice by catches, anthem-wise, give great pleasure. Turning dances into figure, is a childish curiosity; and generally let it be noted, that those things which I here set down, are such as do naturally take the sense, and not respect petty wonderments. It is true, the alterations of scenes, so it be quietly, and without noise, are things of great beauty and pleasure: for they feed and relieve the eye, before it be full of the same object. Let the scenes abound with light, especially coloured and varied; and let the Maskers, or any other that are to come down from the scene, have some motions upon the scene itself, before their coming down; for it draws the eye strangely, and makes it with great pleasure to desire to see that it cannot perfectly discern. Let the songs be loud and cheerful, and not chirpings or pulings. Let the music likewise be sharp and loud, and well placed. The colours that show best by candle-light, are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oes or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. As for rich embroidery, it is lost, and not discerned. Let the suits of Maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizars are off, not after examples of known attires; Turks, soldiers, mariners, and the like. Let Anti-masks not be long; they have been commonly of fools, satyrs, baboons, wild men, antics, beasts, spirits, witches, Æthiopes, Pygmies, Turquets, nymphs, rustics, cupids, statues moving, and the like. As for angels, it is not comical enough to put them in Anti-masks; and any thing that is hideous, as devils, giants, is on the other side as unfit. But chiefly, let the music of them be recreative, and with some strange changes. Some sweet odours suddenly coming forth, without any drops falling, are in such a company, as there is steam and heat, things of great pleasure and refreshment. Double Masks, one of men, another of ladies, addeth state and variety. But all is nothing, except the room be kept clear and neat.

For justs, and turneys, and barriers, the glories of them are chiefly in the chariots, wherein the challengers make their entry, especially if they be drawn with strange beasts, as lions, bears, camels, and the like: or in the devices of their entrance, or in the bravery of their liveries, or in the goodly furniture of their horses and armour. But enough of these toys.

Of Nature in Men.

Nature is often hidden, sometimes overcome, seldom extinguished. Force maketh nature more violent in the return; doctrine and discourse maketh nature less importune: but custom only doth alter and subdue nature. He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great, nor too small tasks, for the first will make him dejected, by often failings; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings. And at the first, let him practise with helps.
swimmers do with bladders or rushes: but after a time let him practise with disadvantages, as dancers do with thick shoes; for it breeds great perfection, if the practice be harder than the use. Where Nature is mighty, and therefore the victory hard, the degrees had need be, first, to stay and arrest Nature in time, like to him that would say over the four-and-twenty letters when he was angry, than to go less in quantity; as if one should, in forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal, and lastly to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best: “He is the best reformer of his mind, who has at once broken the chains which debased his heart, and has repented.”

Neither is the ancient rule amiss, to bend Nature as a wand to a contrary extreme, whereby to set it right, understanding it where the contrary extreme is no vice. Let not a man force a habit upon himself with a perpetual continuance, but with some intermission; for both the pause reinforceth the new onset: and if a man that is not perfect be ever in practice, he shall as well practise his errors, as his abilities, and induce one habit of both: and there is no means to help this, but by seasonable intermission. But let not a man trust his victory over his Nature too far; for Nature will lie buried a great time, and yet revive upon the occasion of temptation: like as it was with Æsop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman, who sat very demurely at the board's end, till a mouse ran before her. Therefore let a man either avoid the occasion altogether, or put himself often to it, that he may be little moved with it. A man's Nature is best perceived in privateness; for there is no affectation in passion, for that putteth a man out of his precepts, and in a new case of experiment, for there custom leaveth him. They are happy men whose natures sort with their vocations; otherwise they may say, "My mind has wandered to many objects;" when they converse in those things they do not affect. In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his Nature, let him take no care for any set times, for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves; so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice. A man's Nature runs either to herbs or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one, and destroy the other.

Of Custom and Education.

MEN'S thoughts are much according to their inclination, their discourse and speeches according to their learning and infused opinions; but their deeds are after as they have been accustomed: and therefore, as Machiavel well noteth, (though in an ill-favoured instance) there is no trusting to the force of nature nor to the bravery of words, except it be corroborate by Custom. His instance is, that for the achieving of a desperate conspiracy, a man should not rest upon the fierceness of any man's nature, or his resolute undertakings; but take such an one as hath had his hands formerly in blood. But Machiavel knew not of a Friar Clement, nor a Raviliac, nor a Jaureguy, nor a Baltazer Gerrard; yet this rule holdeth still, that nature, nor the engagement of words, are not so forcible as Customs. Only superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation, and votary resolution is made equipollent to Custom, even in matter of blood. In other things the predominancy of Custom is every where visible, insomuch as a man would wonder to hear men profess, protest, engage, give great words, and then do just as they have done before; as if they were dead images, and engines moved only by the wheels of Custom. We see also the reign or tyranny of Custom, what it is. The Indians (I mean the sect of their Wise Men) lay themselves quietly upon a stack of wood, and so sacrifice themselves by fire. Nay, the wives strive to be burned with the corpses of their husbands. The lads of Sparta, of ancient time, were wont to be scourged upon the altar of Diana without so much as squeaking. I remember in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's time, of England, an Irish rebel condemned, put up a petition to the Deputy that he might be hanged in a wyth, and not in a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels. There be monks in Russia, for penance, that will sit a whole night in a vessel of water, till they be engaged with hard ice. Many examples may be put down of the force of Custom, both upon mind and body. Therefore since Custom is the principal magistrate of man's life, let men by all means endeavour to obtain good Customs. Certainly Custom is most perfect when it beginneth in young years: this we call Education, which is in effect but an early Custom. So we see in languages, the tongue is more pliant to all expressions and sounds, the joints are more supple to all feats of activity and motions in youth than afterwards. For it is true, the late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix, but have kept themselves open and prepared to receive continual amendment, which is exceeding rare. But if the force of Custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of Custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. For there example teacheth, company comforteth, emulation quickeneth, glory raiseth: so as in such places the force of Custom is in his exaltation. Certainly the great multiplication of virtues upon human nature, resteth upon societies well ordained and disciplined: for Commonwealths and good Governments do nourish virtue grown, but do not much mend the seeds. But the misery is, that the most effectual means are now applied to the ends least to be desired.
OF CUSTOM AND EDUCATION.

Of Fortune.

It cannot be denied, but outward accidents conduce much to Fortune: favour, opportunity, death of others, occasion fitting virtue. But chiefly the mould of a man's fortune is in his own hands. "Every man is the maker of his own Fortune," saith the poet. And the most frequent of external causes is, that the folly of one man is the Fortune of another. For no man prospers so suddenly, as by others errors. "A serpent, unless he devours a serpent, does not become a dragon." Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise; but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth Fortune: certain deliveries of a man's self, which have no name. The Spanish name, Desemboltura, partly expresseth them, when there be not stands nor restiveness in a man's nature, but that the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his Fortune. For so Livy (after he had described Cato Major, in these words, "There was such strength of body and mind in that man, that, in whatsoever place he had been born, he seemed as if he would have made his own Fortune") falleth upon that that he had a versatile genius. Therefore if a man look sharply and attentively, he shall see Fortune: for though she be blind, yet she is not invisible. The way of Fortune is like the milky way in the sky, which is a meeting or knot of a number of small stars; not seen asunder, but giving light together: so are there a number of little, and scarce discerned virtues, or rather faculties and customs, that make men fortunate. The Italians note some of them, such as a man would little think: when they speak of one that cannot do amiss, they will throw in into his other conditions that he hath, poco di matto. And certainly, there be not two more fortunate properties, than to have a little of the fool, and not too much of the honest. Therefore extreme lovers of their country, or masters, were never fortunate; neither can they be. For when a man placeth his thoughts without himself, he goeth not his own way. An hasty Fortune maketh an enterpriser and remover, (the French hath it better, enterprenant, or remuant); but the exercised Fortune maketh the able man. Fortune is to be honoured and respected, if it be but for her daughters, Confidence and Reputation: for those two Felicity breedeth; the first, within a man’s self, the latter in others towards him. All wise men, to decline the envy of their own virtues, use to ascribe them to Providence and Fortune; for so they may the better assume them; and besides, it is greatness in a man to be the care of the higher power. So Cæsar said to the pilot in the tempest, “You carry Cæsar and his Fortune.” So Sylla chose the name of Felix, “Fortunate,” and not of Magnus, “Great.” And it hath been noted, that those that ascribe openly too much to their own wisdom and policy, end unfortunate. It is written, that Timotheus the Athenian, after he had, in the account he gave to the State, of his government, often interlaced his speech, “And in this Fortune had no part,” never prospered in any thing he undertook afterwards. Certainly there be, whose Fortunes are like Homer’s verses, that have a slide and easiness more than the verses of other poets; as Plutarch saith of Timoleon’s Fortune, in respect of that of Agesilaus, or Epaminondas: and that this should be, no doubt it is much in a man’s self.
Of Usury.

Many have made witty invectives against Usury. They say,—That it is a pity that the Devil should have God’s part, which is the tithe—That the Usurer is the greatest Sabbath-breaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday—That the Usurer is the drone that Virgil speaketh of:

All with united force combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.

That the Usurer breaketh the first law that was made for mankind after the fall; which was, “In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat thy bread,” and not “in the sweat of another man’s”—That Usurers should have orange-tawny bonnets, because they do Judaize—That it is against nature, for money to beget money; and the like. I say this only, that Usury is a “thing allowed on account of the hardness of the human heart:” for since there must be borrowing and lending, and men are so hard of heart as they will not lend freely, Usury must be permitted. Some others have made suspicious and cunning propositions of banks, discovery of men’s estates, and other inventions; but few have spoken of Usury usefully. It is good to set before us the incommodities and commodities of Usury, that the good may be either weighed out, or culled out; and warily to provide, that while we make forth to that which is better, we meet not with that which is worse.

The discommodities of Usury are, first, that it makes fewer merchants; for were it not for this lazy trade of Usury, money would not lie still, but would in great part be employed upon merchandising, which is the vena porta of wealth in a State. The second, that it makes poor merchants; for as a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great Usury. The third, is incident to the other two; and that is, the decay of customs of kings or states, which ebb or flow with merchandising. The fourth, that it bringeth the treasure of a realm or state into a few hands; for the Usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end of the game most of the money will be in the box; and ever a state flourisheth, when wealth is more equally spread. The fifth, that it beats down the price of land; for the employment of money is chiefly either merchandising or purchasing; and Usury waylays both. The sixth, that it doth dull and damp all industries, improvements, and new inventions, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. The last, that it is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which in process of time breeds a public poverty.

On the other side, the commodities of Usury are: first, that howsoever Usury in some respect hindereth merchandising, yet in some other it advanceth it; for it is certain, that the greatest part of trade is driven by young merchants, upon borrowing at interest: so as if the Usurer either call in, or keep back his money, there will ensue presently a great stand of trade. The second is, that were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means (be it lands or goods) far under foot; and so, whereas Usury doth but gnaw upon them, bad markets would swallow them quite up. As for mortgaging or pawnng, it will little mend the matter; for either men will not take pawns without use, or if they do, they will look precisely for the forfeiture. I remember a cruel monied man in the country that would say,—The devil take this Usury, it keeps us from forfeitures of mortgages and bonds. The third and last is, that it is a vanity to conceive, that there would be ordinary borrowing without profit; and it is impossible to conceive the number of inconveniences that will ensue, if borrowing be cramped: therefore, to speak of the abolishing of Usury is idle. All States have ever had it in one kind, or rate, or other: so as that opinion must be sent to Utopia.

To speak now of the reformation and regulation of Usury, how the discommodities of it may be best avoided, and the commodities retained. It appears by the balance of commodities and discommodities of Usury, two things are to be reconciled: the one, that the tooth of Usury be grinded, that it bite not too much; the other, that there be left open a means to invite monied men to lend to the merchants, for the continuing and quickening of trade. This cannot be done, except you introduce two several sorts of Usury, a less and a greater. For if you reduce Usury to one low rate, it will ease the common borrower, but the merchant will be to seek for money. And it is to be noted, that the trade of merchandize, being the most lucrative, may bear Usury at a good rate; other contracts not so.

To serve both intentions, the way would be chiefly thus: that there be two rates of Usury, the one free and general for all, the other under licence only to certain persons and in certain places of merchandising. First, therefore, let Usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current; and let the State shut itself out to take any penalty for the same. This will preserve borrowing from any general stop or dryness. This will ease infinite borrowers in the country. This will in good part raise the price of land; because land purchased at sixteen years purchase, will yield six in the hundred, and somewhat more; whereas this rate of interest yields but five. This by like reason will encourage and edge industrious and profitable improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind, than take five in the hundred, especially having been used to greater profit. Secondly, let there be certain persons licensed to lend to known merchants, upon Usury, at a high rate; and let it be with the cautions following. Let the rate be, even with the merchant himself, somewhat more easy than that he used formerly to pay: for by that means all borrowers shall have some ease by this reformation, be he merchant or whosoever. Let it be no bank or common stock, but every man be master of his own money. Not that I altogether mislike banks; but they will hardly be brooked, in regard of certain suspicions. Let the State be answered some small matter for the licence, and the rest left to the lender; for if the abatement be but small, it will no whit discourage the lender. For he, for example, that took before ten or nine in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight in the hundred, than give over his trade of Usury, and go from certain gains to gains of hazard. Let these licensed lenders be in number indefinite, but restrained to certain principal cities and towns of merchandising, for then they will be hardly able to colour other men's monies in the country, so as the licence of nine will not suck away the current rate of five; for no man will lend his monies far off, nor put them into unknown hands.

If it be objected, that this doth in a sort authorise Usury, which before was in some places but permissive; the answer is, that it is better to mitigate Usury by declaration, than to suffer it to rage by connivance.

Of Youth and Age.

A MAN that is young in years, may be old in hours, if he have lost no time; but that happeneth rarely. Generally Youth is like the first cogitations, not so wise as the second; for there is a Youth in thoughts as well as in Ages: and yet the invention of young men is more lively than that of old, and imaginations stream into their minds better, and, as it were, more divinely. Natures that have much heat, and great and violent desires and perturbations, are not ripe for action till they have passed the meridian of their years; as it was with Julius Cæsar, and Septimius Severus; of the latter of whom it is said, "He passed his Youth in errors, nay even full of madness;" and yet he was the ablest Emperor almost of all the list. But repose natures may do well in Youth, as it is seen in Augustus Caesar, Cosmus Duke of Florence, Gaston de Fois, and others. On the other side, heat and vivacity in Age is an excellent composition for business. Young men are fitter to invent than to judge, fitter for execution than for counsel, and fitter for new projects than for settled business; for the experience of Age in things that fall within the compass of it, directeth them, but in new things abuseth them. The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done or sooner. Young Men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold; stir more than they can quiet; fly to the end without consideration of the means and degrees; pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon absurdly; care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences; use extreme remedies at first, and, that which doubleth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them, like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Men of Age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon, and seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves.
OF YOUTH AND AGE.

with a mediocrity of success. Certainly it is good to compound employments of both; for that will be good for the present, because the virtues of either age may correct the defects of both, and good for succession, that Young Men may be learners, while men in Age are actors. And lastly, good for extern accidents, because authority followeth Old Men, and favour and popularity Youth. But for the moral part perhaps Youth will have the pre-eminence, as Age hath for the politic. A certain Rabbin upon the text, "Your Young Men shall see visions, and your Old Men shall dream dreams," inferreth, that young men are admitted nearer to God than old, because vision is a clearer revelation than a dream. And certainly the more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and Age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. There be some have an over-early ripeness in their years, which faeth betimes: these are first such as have brittle wits, the edge whereof is soon turned; such as was Hermogenes the rhetorician, whose books are exceeding subtile, who afterwards waxed stupid. A second sort is of those that have some natural dispositions which have better grace in Youth than in Age; such as is a fluent and luxuriant speech, which becomes Youth well, but not Age: so Tully saith of Hortensius, "He remained the same, but the same did not become him." The third is, of such as take too high a strain at the first, and are magnanimous more than tract of years can uphold: as was Scipio Afric anus, of whom Livy saith in effect, "The latter part of his life did not come up to the first."
OF BEAUTY.

Of Beauty.

VIRTUE is like a rich stone, best plain set; and surely, virtue is best in a body that is comely, though not of delicate features, and that hath rather dignity of presence, than beauty of aspect. Neither is it almost seen that very beautiful persons are otherwise of great virtue; as if nature were rather busy not to err, than in labour to produce excellency; and therefore they prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study rather behaviour than virtue. But this holds not always, for Augustus Cæsar, Titus Vespasianus, Philip le Bel of France, Edward the Fourth of England, Alcibiades of Athens, Ismael the Sophi of Persia, were all high and great spirits, and yet the most beautiful men of their times. In Beauty, that of favour is more than that of colour; and that of decent and gracious motion, more than that of favour. That is the best part of Beauty which a picture cannot express, nor the first sight of the life. There is no excellent Beauty that hath not some strangeness in the proportion. A man cannot tell, whether Apelles or Albert Durer were the more trifler; whereof the one would make a personage by geometrical proportions, the other by taking the best parts out of divers faces to make one excellent. Such personages I think would please nobody, but the painter that made them. Not but I think a painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, (as a musician that maketh an excellent air in music) and not by rule. A man shall see faces, that if you examine them part by part, you shall find never a good, and yet all together do well. If it be true, that the principal part of Beauty is in decent motion, certainly it is no marvel though persons in years seem many times more amiable, "Of all beautiful things, Autumn is the most beautiful;" for no youth can be comely but by pardon, and considering the youth as to make up the comeliness. Beauty is as summer-fruits, which are easy to corrupt, and cannot last; and for the most part it makes a dissolute youth, and an age, a little out of countenance; but yet certainly again, if it light well, it maketh virtues shine, and vices blush.
Of Deformity.

Deformed persons are commonly even with Nature; for as Nature hath done ill by them, so do they by Nature, being for the most part (as the Scripture saith) void of natural affection, and so they have revenge of Nature. Certainly, there is a consent between the body and the mind; and where Nature erreth in the one, she ventureth in the other: "Ubi peccat in uno, periclitatur in altero." "Where she errrs in the one, there is danger that she will do so in the other." But because there is in man an election touching the frame of his mind, and a necessity in the frame of his body, the stars of natural inclination are sometimes obscured by the sun of discipline and virtue: therefore it is good to consider of Deformity, not as a sign which is more deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Whosoever hath any thing fixed in his person that doth induce contempt, hath also a perpetual spur in himself to rescue and deliver himself from scorn. Therefore all deformed persons are extreme bold. First, as in their own defence, as being exposed to scorn, but in process of time, by a general habit. Also it stirreth in them industry, and especially of this kind, to watch and observe the weakness of others, that they may have somewhat to repay. Again, in their superiors, it quencheth jealousy towards them, as persons that they think they may at pleasure despise: and it layeth their competitors and emulators asleep, as never believing they should be in possibility of advancement, till they see them in possession; so that upon the matter in a great wit, Deformity is an advantage to rising. Kings in ancient times (and at this present in some countries) were wont to put great trust in eunuchs; because they that are envious to all, are more obnoxious and officious towards one. But yet their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials, and good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. And much like is the reason of deformed persons. Still the ground is, they will, if they be of spirit, seek to free themselves from scorn, which must be either by virtue or malice; and therefore let it not be marveled if sometimes they prove excellent persons; as was Agesilaus, Zanger the son of Solyman, Æsop, Gasca President of Peru; and Socrates may go likewise amongst them, with others.

Of Building.

Houses are built to live in, and not to look on: therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Leave the goodly fabrics of houses, for beauty only, to the enchanted palaces of the poets, who build them with small cost. He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat, committeth himself to prison. Neither do I reckon it an ill seat only where the air is unwholesome, but likewise where the air is unequal; as you shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathereth as in troughs; so as you shall have, and that suddenly, as great diversity of heat and cold, as if you dwelt in several places. Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill seat, but ill ways, ill markets, and, if you will consult with Momus, ill neighbours. I speak not of any more: want of water, want of wood, shade and shelter, want of fruitfulness, and mixture of grounds of several natures, want of prospect, want of level grounds, want of places at some near distance for sports of hunting, hawking, and races; too near the sea, too remote; having the commodity of navigable rivers, or the discommodity of their overflowing; too far off from great cities, which may hinder business, or too near them, which lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear: where a man hath a great living laid together, and where he is scanty. All which, as it is impossible perhaps to find together, so it is good to know them, and think of them.
OF BUILDING.

that a man may take as many as he can; and if he have several dwellings, that he sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one, he may find in the other. Lucullus answered Pompey well, who, when he saw his stately galleries and rooms so large and lightsome in one of his houses, said: "Surely an excellent place for summer, but how do you in winter?" Lucullus answered: "Why do you not think me as wise as some fowls are, that ever change their abode towards the winter?"

To pass from the seat to the house itself, we will do as Cicero doth in the orator's art, who writes books De Oratore, and a book he entitiles Orator; whereof the former delivers the precepts of the art, and the latter the perfection. We will therefore describe a princely palace, making a brief model thereof. For it is strange to see now in Europe such huge Buildings, as the Vatican, and Escorial, and some others be, and yet scarce a very fair room in them.

First therefore, I say, you cannot have a perfect palace, except you have two several sides; a side for the banquet, as is spoken of in the book of Hester, and a side for the household; the one for feasts and triumphs, and the other for dwelling. I understand both these sides to be not only returns, but parts of the front, and to be uniform without, though severally partitioned within; and to be on both sides of a great and stately tower in the midst of the front, that as it were joineth them together on either hand. I would have on the side of the banquet, in front, one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty feet high, and under it a room for a dressing or preparing place at times of triumphs. On the other side, which is the household side, I wish it divided at the first into a hall and a chapel, (with a partition between) both of good state and bigness; and those not to go all the length, but to have at the further end a winter and a summer parlour, both fair; and under these rooms, a fair and large cellar sunk under ground; and likewise some privy kitchens, with butteries and pantries, and the like. As for the tower, I would have it two stories, of eighteen feet high a-piece above the two wings, and goodly leads upon the top, railed, with statues interposed, and the same tower to be divided into rooms as shall be thought fit; the stairs likewise to the upper rooms, let them be upon a fair open newel, and finely railed in with images of wood, cast into a brass colour, and a very fair landing-place at the top. But this to be, if you do not point any of the lower rooms for a dining-place of servants, for otherwise you shall have the servants’ dinner after your own; for the steam of it will come up as in a tunnel. And so much for the front: only I understand the height of the first stairs to be sixteen feet, which is the height of the lower room.

Beyond this front is there to be a fair court, but three sides of it of a far lower building than the front. And in all the four corners of that court fair stair-cases, cast into turrets on the outside, and not within the row of Buildings themselves.
But those towers are not to be of the height of the front, but rather proportionable to the lower Building. Let the court not be paved, for that striketh up a great heat in summer, and much cold in winter; but only some side alleys, with a cross, and the quarters to graze being kept shorn, but not too near shorn. The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three, or five fine cupolas in the length of it, placed at equal distance, and fine co-oured windows of several works. On the household side, chambers of presence and ordinary entertainment, with some bed-chambers; and let all three sides be a double house, without thorough-lights on the sides, that you may have rooms from the sun, both for forenoon and afternoon. Cast it also, that you may have rooms both for summer and winter; shady for summer, and warm for winter.
You shall have sometimes fair houses so full of glass, that one cannot tell where to become to be out of the sun, or cold. For inbowed windows I hold them of good use, (in cities indeed upright do better, in respect of the uniformity towards the street); for they be pretty retiring places for conference; and besides they keep both the wind and the sun off: for that which would strike almost through the room, doth scarce pass the window. "But let them be but few, four in the court on the sides only.

Beyond this court let there be an inward court of the same square and height, which is to be environed with the garden on all sides; and in the inside cloistered upon all sides; upon decent and beautiful arches, as high as the first story. On the under story towards the garden, let it be turned to a grotto, or place of shade or estivation; and only have opening and windows towards the garden, and be level upon floor, no whit sunk under ground, to avoid all dampishness: and let there be a fountain, or some fair work of statues in the midst of this court, and to be paved as the other court was. These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries: whereof you must foresee that one of them be for an infirmary, if the prince or any special person should be sick, with chambers, bed-chambers, anticamera, and recamera, joining to it: this upon the second story. Upon the ground story a fair gallery, open, upon pillars; and upon the third story likewise, an open gallery, upon pillars, to take the prospect and
Of Gardens.

GOD Almighty first planted a Garden; and indeed it is the purest of human pleasures. It is the greatest refreshment to the spirits of man; without which buildings and palaces are but gross handy-works. And a man shall ever see, that when ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely: as if gardening were the greater perfection. I do hold it in the royal ordering of Gardens, there ought to be Gardens for all the months in the year, in which, severally, things of beauty may be then in season: For December and January, and the latter part of November, you must take such things as are green all winter; holly, ivy, bays, juniper, cypress trees, yews, pine-apple trees, fir-trees, rosemary, lavender, perriwinkle, the white, the purple, and the blue germander, flags, orange-trees, lemon-trees, and myrtle, if they be stoved, and sweet marjoram warm set. There followeth for the latter part of January and February, the mezerion tree, which then blossoms; crocus vernus, both the yellow and the grey; primroses, anemones, the early tulippa, hyacinthus orientalis, chamairis, fretellaria. For March there comes violets, especially the single blue, which are earliest; the yellow daffodil, the daizy, the almond-tree in blossom, the peach-tree in blossom, the cornelian-tree in blossom, sweet-briar. In April follow the double white violet, the wall-flower, the stock gilly-flower, the cowslip, flower-de-luces, and lilies of all natures, rosemary-flower, the tulippa, the double piony, the pale daffodil, the French honey-suckle, the cherry-tree.
blossom, the damascene and plum-trees in blossom, the white thorn in leaf, the lilac tree. In May and June come pinks of all sorts, especially the blush-pink, roses of all kinds, except the musk, which comes later; honey-suckles, strawberries, bugloss, columbine, the French marygold, flos africanus, cherry-tree in fruit, ribes, figs in fruit, rasps, vine-flowers, lavender in flowers, the sweet-satyrian with the white flower, herba muscaria, lilium convallium, the apple-tree in blossom. In July come gilly-flowers of all varieties, musk-roses, and the lime-tree in blossom, early pears and plums in fruit, genitings, codlins. In August come plums of all sorts in fruit, pears, apricots, barberries, filberds, musk-melons, monks-hoods of all colours. In September come grapes, apples, poppies of all colours, peaches, melo-cotones, nectarines, cornelians, wandens, quinces. In October, and the beginning of November, come services, medlars, bullaces; roses cut or removed to come late, hollyoaks, and such like. These particulars are for the climate of London: but my meaning is perceived, that you may have ver perpetum, "a constant spring," as the place affords.

And because the breath of flowers is far sweeter in the air, (where it comes and goes, like the warbling of music) than in the hand, therefore nothing is more fit for that delight than to know what be the flowers and plants that do best perfume the air. Roses damask and red are flowers tenacious of their smells, so that you may walk by a whole row of them, and find nothing of their sweetness; yea, though it be in a morning dew. Bays likewise yield no smell as they grow, rosemary little, nor sweet-marjoram. That which above all others yields the sweetest smell in the air, is the violet, especially the white double violet, which comes twice a year, about the middle of April, and about Bartholomew-tide. Next to that is the musk-rose, then the strawberry-leaves dying with a most excellent cordial smell. Then the flower of the vines; it is a little dust, like the dust of a bent, which grows upon the cluster in the first coming forth. Then sweet-briar; then wall-flowers, which are very delightful to be set under a parlour, or lower chamber-window. Then pinks and gilly-flowers, especially the matted pink, and clove gilly-flower. Then the flowers of the lime-tree. Then the honeysuckles, so they be somewhat afar off. Of bean-flowers, I speak not, because they are field-flowers. But those which perfume the air most delightfully, not passed by as the rest, but being trodden upon and crushed, are three: that is, burnet, wild-thyme, and water-mints. Therefore you are to set whole alleys of them, to have the pleasure when you walk or tread.
For Gardens, (speaking of those which are indeed prince-like, as we have done of Buildings) the contents ought not well to be under thirty acres of ground, and to be divided into three parts; a green in the entrance, a heath or desert in the going forth, and the main garden in the midst, besides alleys on both sides. And I like well, that four acres of ground be assigned to the green, six to the heath, four and four to either side, and twelve to the main Garden. The green hath two pleasures; the one, because nothing is more pleasant to the eye than green grass kept finely shorn; the other, because it will give you a fair alley in the midst, by which you may go in front upon a stately hedge, which is to enclose the Garden. But because the alley will be long, and in great heat of the year or day, you ought not to buy the shade in the Garden, by going in the sun through the green; therefore you are of either side the green to plant a covert alley upon carpenter's work, about twelve feet in height, by which you may go in shade into the Garden. As for the making of knots of figures, with divers coloured earths, that they may lie under the windows of the house, on that side which the Garden stands, they be but toys; you may see as good sights many times in tarts. The Garden is best to be square, encompassed on all the four sides with a stately arched hedge: the arches to be upon pillars of carpenter's work, of some ten feet high, and six feet broad, and the spaces between of the same dimension with the breadth of the arch. Over the arches let there be an entire hedge, of some four feet high, framed also upon carpenter's work; and upon the upper hedge, over every arch a little turret, with a belly enough, to receive a cage of birds; and over every space between the arches, some other little figure, with broad plates of round coloured glass gilt, for the sun to play upon. But this hedge I intend to be raised upon a bank, not steep, but gently slope, of some six feet, set all with flowers. Also I understand, that this square of the Garden should not be the whole breadth of the ground, but to leave on the hither side ground enough for diversity of side-alleys, unto which the two covert alleys of the green may deliver you; but there must be no alleys with hedges at either end of this great inclosure: not at the higher end, for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green; nor at the further end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath.

For the ordering of the ground within the great hedge, I leave it to variety of device. Advising nevertheless, that, whatsoever form you cast it into, first, it be not too busy, or full of work; wherein I, for my part, do not like images cut out in juniper, or other garden-stuff; they be for children. Little low hedges, round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well: and in some places fair columns upon frames of carpenter's work. I would also have the alleys spacious and fair. You may have closer alleys upon the side-grounds, but none in the main garden. I wish also in the very middle a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk abreast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or imbossments; and the whole mount to be thirty feet high, and some fine banqueting house, with some chimneys neatly cast, and without too much glass.

For fountains, they are a great beauty and refreshment; but pools mar all, and make the Garden unwholesome, and full of flies and frogs. Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water, the other a fair receipt of water, of some thirty or forty feet square; but without fish, or slime, or mud. For the first, the ornaments of images gilt, or of marble, which are in use, do well; but the main matter is, so to convey the water, as it never stay, either in the bowls, or in the cistern, that the water be never by rest discoloured, green or red, or the like; or gather any mssiness or putrefaction. Besides that, it is to be cleansed every day by the hand; also some steps up to it, and some fine pavement about it doth well. As for the other kind of fountain, which we may call a bathing-pool, it may admit much curiosity and beauty, wherewith we will not trouble ourselves:—as that the bottom be finely paved, and with images; the sides likewise; and withal embellished with coloured glass, and such things of lustre; encompassed also with fine rails of low stature. But the main point is the same which we mentioned in the former kind of fountain, which is, that the water be in perpetual motion, fed by a water higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged away under ground by some equality of bores, that it stay little. And for fine devices of arching water without spilling, and making it rise in several forms, (of feathers, drinking-glasses, canopies, and the like,) they be pretty things to look on, but nothing to health and sweetness.
OF GARDENS.

For the health, which was the third part of our plot, I wish it to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Trees I would have none in it, but some thickets, made only of sweet-briar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst, and the ground set with violets, strawberries and primroses: for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade. And these to be in the heath, here and there, not in any order. I like also little heaps, the nature of mole-hills, (such as are in wild heaths) to be set, some with wild thyme, some with pink, some with germander, that gives a good flower to the eye; some with periwinkle, some with violets, some with strawberries, some with cowslips, some with daisies, some with red roses, some with lilium convallium, some with sweetwilliams, red; some with bear's-foot, and the like low flowers, being withal sweet and sightly. Part of which heaps, to be with standards of little bushes, pricked upon their top, and part without; the standards to be roses, juniper, holly, bear-berries; but here and there, (because of the smell of their blossom) red currants, gooseberries, rosemary, bays, sweet-briar, and such like. But these standards to be kept with cutting, that they grow not out of course.

For the side-grounds, you are to fit them with variety of alleys; private, to give a full shade; some of them, whereasover the sun be. You are to frame some of them likewise for shelter, that when the wind blows sharp, you may walk as in a gallery. And those alleys must be likewise hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind; and these closer alleys must be ever finely gravelled, and no grass, because of going wet. In many of these alleys likewise, you are to set fruit-trees of all sorts; as well upon the walls, as in ranges. And this would be generally observed, that the borders wherein you plant your fruit-trees, be fair, and large and low, and not steep, and set with fine flowers, but thin and sparingly, lest they deceive the trees. At the end of both the side-grounds, I would have a mount of some pretty height, leaving the wall of the enclosure breast-high, to look abroad into the fields.

For the main Garden, I do not deny, but there should be some fair alleys ranged on both sides with fruit-trees, and some pretty tufts of fruit-trees, and arbours with seats, set in some decent order; but these to be by no means set too thick; but to leave the main Garden so as it be not close, but the air open and free: for as for shade, I would have you rest upon the alleys of the side-grounds, there to walk, if you be disposed, in the heat of the year or day: but to make account, that the main Garden is for the more temperate parts of the year; and in the heat of summer, for the morning, and the evening, or overcast days.

For aviaries, I like them not, except they be of that largeness, as they may be turfed, and have living plants and bushes set in them, that the birds may have more scope, and natural nestling, and that no foulness appear in the floor of the aviary. So I have made a platform of a princely Garden, partly by precept, partly by drawing, not a model.
but some general lines of it, and in this I have spared no cost. But it is nothing for great princes, that for the most part, taking advice with workmen, with no less cost, set their things together, and sometimes add statues and such things, for state and magnificence, but nothing to the true pleasure of a Garden.

Of Negotiating.

It is generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by the mediation of a third, than by a man's self. Letters are good, when a man would draw an answer by letter back again: or when it may serve for a man's justification afterwards to produce his own letter, or where it may be danger to be interrupted or heard by pieces. To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, as commonly with inferiors; or in tender cases, where a man's eye, upon the countenance of him with whom he speaketh, may give him a direction how far to go: and generally where a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow, or to expound. In choice of instruments, it is better to choose men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that is committed to them, and to report back again faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive out of other men's business somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report for satisfaction sake. Use also such persons as affect the business wherein they are employed, for that quickeneth much; and such as are fit for the matter:—as bold men for expostulation; fair-spoken men for persuasion; crafty men for inquiry and observation; froward and absurd men for business that doth not well bear out itself. Use also such as have been lucky, and prevailed before in things wherein you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription. It is better to sound a person with whom one deals afar off, than to fall upon the point at first; except you mean to surprize him by some short question. It is better dealing with men in appetite, than with those that are where they would be. If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start of the first performance is all, which a man cannot reasonably demand, except either the nature of the thing be such which must go before; or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing; or else that he be counted the honester man. All practice is to discover, or to work: men discover themselves in trust, in passion, at unawares, and of necessity, when they would have somewhat done, and cannot find an apt pretext.
OF NEGOTIATING.

185
If you would work any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weakness and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. In dealing with cunning persons, we must ever consider their ends to interpret their speeches; and it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. In all Negotiations of difficulty, a man may not look to sow and reap at once, but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

Of Followers and Friends.

COSTLY Followers are not to be liked, lest while a man maketh his train longer, he makes his wings shorter, I reckon to be costly, not them alone which charge the purse, but which are wearisome and importunate in suits. Ordinary Followers ought to challenge no higher conditions than countenance, recommendation, and protection from wrongs. Factious Followers are worse to be liked, which follow not upon affection to him with whom they range themselves, but upon discontentment conceived against some other: whereupon commonly ensueth that ill intelligence that we many times see between great personages. Likewise glorious Followers who make themselves as trumpets of commendation of those that follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint business through want of secrecy, and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. There is a kind of Followers likewise which are dangerous, being indeed espials; which inquire the secrets of the house, and bear tales of them to other: yet such men, many times, are in great favour; for they are officious, and commonly exchange tales. The Following by certain estates of men, answerable to that which a great person himself professeth, (as of soldiers to him that hath been employed in the wars, and the like) hath ever been a thing civil, and well taken even in monarchies; so it be without too much pomp of popularity. But the most honourable kind of Following, is to be followed as one that apprehendeth to advance virtue and desert in all sorts of persons. And yet where there is no eminent odds in sufficiency, it is better to take with the more passable, than with the more able. And besides, to speak truth, in base times, active men are of more use than virtuous. It is true, that in Government it is good to use men of one rank equally; for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent, because they may claim a due. But contrariwise, in favour to use men with much difference and election is good; for it maketh the persons preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious, because all is of favour. It is good discretion not to make too much of any man at the first; because one cannot hold out that proportion. To be governed (as we call it) by one, is not safe; for it shows softness, and gives a freedom to scandal and disreputation; for those that would not censure or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are so great with them, and thereby wound their honour; yet to be distracted with many is worse; for it makes men to be of the last impression, and full of change. To take advice of some few friends is ever honourable; for "Lookers-on, many times, see more than gamesters, and the vale best discovereth the hill." There is little Friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified. That that is, is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend one the other.

Of Suitors.

Many ill matters and projects are undertaken, and private suits do putrify the public good. Many good matters are undertaken with bad minds; I mean, not only corrupt minds, but crafty minds that intend not performance. Some embrace suits which never mean to deal effectually in them; but if they see there may be life in the matter by some other mean, they will be content to win a thank, or take a second reward; or at least to make use in the mean time of the suitor's hopes. Some take hold of suits only for an occasion to cross some other, or to make an information, whereof they could not otherwise have apt pretext, without care what become of the Suit when that turn is served; or generally, to make other men's business a kind of entertainment to bring in their own. Nay, some undertake Suits with a full purpose to let them fall, to the end to gratify the adverse party or competitor. Surely there is in some sort a right in every Suit; either a right of equity, if it be a suit of controversy, or a right of desert, if it be a suit of petition. If affection lead a man to favour the wrong side in justice, let him rather use his countenance to compound the matter, than to carry it. If affection lead a man to favour the less worthy in desert, let him do it without depraving or disabling the better deserver. In Suits which a man doth not well understand, it is good to refer them to some friend of trust and judgment, that may report, whether he may deal in them with honour; but let him choose well his referendaries, for else he may be led by the nose. Suitors are so distasted with delays and abuses, that plain dealing in denying to deal in Suits at first, and reporting the success barely, and in challenging no more thanks than one hath deserved, is grown not only honourable, but also gracious. In Suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery. To be ignorant of the value of a Suit is simplicity; as well as to be ignorant of the right thereof is want of conscience. Secrecy in Suits is a great mean of obtaining; for voicing them to be in forwardness, may discourage some kind of Suitors; but doth quicken and awaken others; but timing of the Suit is the principal. Timing, I say, not only in respect of the person that should grant it, but in respect of those which are too like to cross it. Let a man, in the choice of his mean, rather choose the fittest mean, than the greatest mean; and rather them that deal in certain things, than those that are general. The reparation of a denial is sometimes equal to the first grant, if a man show himself neither dejected nor discontented: "You may ask a thing which ought not to be granted, that you may receive one that ought;" is a good rule, where a man hath strength of favour: but otherwise a man were better rise in his Suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the Suitor, will not in the conclusion lose both the Suitor and his own former favour. Nothing is thought so easy a request to a great person as his letter; and yet, if it be not in a good cause, it is so much out of his reputation. There are no worse instruments than these general contrivers of Suits, for they are but a kind of poison and infection to public proceedings.

Of Studies.

STUDIES serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight, is in privateness and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots, and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in Studies, is sloth; to use them too much for ornament, is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar. They perfect Nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by Study; and Studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men contemn Studies, simple men admire them, and wise men use them: for they teach not their own use, but that is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others: but that would be only in the less important arguments, and the meaner sort of books; else, distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great memory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning to seem to know that he doth not. Histories make men wise, poets witty, the mathematics subtile, natural philosophy deep, moral grave, logic and rhetoric able to contend. "Our Studies pass into our manners, i. e. our manners show what our Studies have been." Nay, there is no stand or impediment in the wit, but may be wrought out by fit Studies: like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises. Bowling is good for the stone and 'reins'; shooting, for the lungs and breast; gentle walking, for the stomach; riding, for the head; and the like. So if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the mathematics; for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again: if his wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the school-men; for they are "Cutters of cammin, i. e. splitters of hairs, or over-nice distinguishers." If he be not apt to beat over-matters, and to call up one thing to approve and illustrate another, let him study the lawyer's cases; so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.

Of Faction.

Many have an opinion, not wise, that for a prince to govern his estate, or for a great person to govern his proceedings, according to the respect of Factions, is a principal part of policy; whereas, contrariwise, the chiepest wisdom is, either in ordering those things which are general, and wherein men of several Factions do nevertheless agree; or in dealing with correspondence to particular persons one by one. But I say not, that the consideration of Factions is to be neglected. Mean men in their rising must adhere; but great men, that have strength in themselves, were better to maintain themselves indifferent and neutral; yet even in beginners to adhere so moderately, as he be a man of the one Faction, which is most passable with the other, commonly giveth best way. The lower and weaker Faction is the firmer in conjunction: and it is often seen, that a few that are stiff, do tire out a great number that are more moderate. When one of the Factions is extinguished, the remaining subdivideth: as the Faction between Lucullus and the rest of the nobles of the senate (which they call Optimates) held out a while against the Factions of Pompey and Cæsar; but when the senate's authority was pulled down, Cæsar and Pompey soon after brake. The Faction or party of Antonius, and Octavianus Cæsar, against Brutus and Cassius, held out likewise for a time; but when Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, then soon after Antonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. These examples are of wars, but the same holdeth in private Factions: and therefore those that are seconds in Factions, do many times, when the Faction subdivideth, prove principals; but many times also they prove cyphers and are cashiered. For many a man's strength is in opposition, and when that faileth, he growth out of use. It is commonly seen, that men once placed, take in with the contrary Faction to that by which they enter, thinking belike that they have their first sure, and now are ready for a new purchase. The traitor in Faction lightly goeth away with it; for when matters have stuck long in balancing, the winning of some one man casteth them, and he getteth all the thanks. The even carriage between two Facions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a trueness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Certainly in Italy they hold it a little suspect in Popes, when they have often in their mouth padre commune, and take it to be a sign of one that meaneth to refer all to the greatness of his own house. Kings had need beware how they side themselves, and make themselves as of a Faction or party; for leagues within the state are ever pernicious to monarchies; for they raise an obligation, paramount to the obligation of sovereignty, and make the king "as if he were one of us;" as was to be seen in the League of France. When Facions are carried too high, and too violently, it is a sign of weakness in princes, and much to the prejudice both of their authority, and business. The motions of Facions under kings ought to be like the motions (as the astronomers speak) of the inferior orbs, which may have their proper motion, but yet still are quietly carried by the higher motion of primum mobile, “the main spring or impulse.”

Of Ceremonies and Respects.

He that is only real, had need have exceeding great parts of virtue; as the stone had need to be rich, that is set without foil. But if a man mark it well, it is in praise and commendation of men, as it is in gettings and gains; for the proverb is true, “that light gains make heavy purses;” for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. So it is true, that small matters win great commendation, because they are continually in use, and in note; whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals. Therefore it doth much add to a man’s reputation, and is (as Queen Isabella said) “like perpetual letters commendatory, to have good forms.” To attain them, it almost sufficeth not to despise them: for so shall a man observe them in others, and let him trust himself with the rest. For if he labour too much to express them, he shall lose their grace, which is to be natural and unaffected.
Some men’s behaviour is like a verse, wherein every syllable is measured. How can a man com-
OF CEREMONIES AND RESPECTS. 197

prehend great matters, that breaketh his mind too much to small observations? Not to use Ceremonies at all, is to teach others not to use them again; and to diminish respect to himself; especially, they are not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures: but the dwelling upon them, and exalting them above the moon, is not only tedious, but doth diminish the faith and credit of him that speaks. And certainly there is a kind of conveying of effectual, and imprinting passions amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Amongst a man’s peers, a man shall be sure of familiarity; and therefore it is good a little to keep state. Amongst a man’s inferiors, one shall be sure of reverence; and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. He that is too much in any thing, so that he giveth another occasion of society, maketh himself cheap. To apply one’s self to others is good, so it be with demonstration that a man doth it upon regard, and not upon facility. It is a good precept generally, in seconding another, yet to add somewhat of one’s own: as if you would grant his opinion, let it be with some distinction; if you would follow his motion, let it be with condition; if you allow his counsel, let it be with alleging further reason. Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments: for be they never so sufficient otherwise, their enviers will be sure to give them that attribute, to disadvantage of their greater virtues. It is loss also in business, to be too full of Respects, or to be too curious in observing times and opportunities. Solomon saith: "He that considereth the wind shall not sow, and he that looketh to the clouds shall not reap." A wise man will not make more opportunities than he finds. Men's behaviour should be like their apparel, not too strait, or point device, but free for exercise or motion.

Of Praise.

PRAISE is the reflection of virtue, but it is as the glass or body which giveth the reflection. If it be from the common people, it is commonly false and naught, and rather followeth vain persons than virtuous. For the common people understand not many excellent virtues: the lowest virtues draw Praise from them, the middle virtues work in them astonishment or admiration, but of the highest virtues they have no sense or perceiving at all; but shows, and species virtutibus similis, serve best with them. Certainly fame is like a river that beareth up things light and swoln, and drowns things weighty and solid: but if persons of quality and judgment concur, then it is, (as the Scripture saith), "A good name is like fragrant ointment;" it filleth all round about, and will not easily away: for the odours of ointments are more durable than those of flowers. There be so many false points of Praise, that a man may justly hold it a suspect. Some Praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch-flatterer, which is a man's self; and wherein a man thinketh best of himself, therein the flatterer will uphold him most; but if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself, that he is most defective and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce, "in spite of conscience." Some Praises come of good wishes and respects, which is a form due in civility to kings and great persons: "By praising men for qualities which they do not possess, to point out to them what qualities they ought to possess;" when by telling men what they are, they represent to them what they should be. Some men are praised maliciously to their hurt, thereby to stir envy and jealousy towards them: "The worst kind of enemies is that of flatterers;" insomuch as it was a proverb amongst the Grecians; "that he that was praised to his hurt should have a push rise upon his nose." As we say: "that a blister will rise upon one's tongue that tell a lie." Certainly, moderate Praise, used with opportunity, and not vulgar, is that which doth the good. Solomon saith: "He that praiseth his friend aloud, rising early, it shall be to him no better than a curse." Too much magnifying of a man or matter, doth irritate contradiction, and procure envy and scorn. To praise a man's self cannot be decent, except it be in rare cases; but to praise a man's office or profession, he may do it with good grace, and with a kind of magnanimity. The cardinals of Rome, which are the theologues, and friars, and schoolmen, have a phrase of notable contempt and scorn towards civil business: for they call all temporal business of wars, embassages, judicature, and other employments, Shireri, which is under-sherriffries, as if they were but matters for under-sheriffs and catchpoles: though many times those under-sheriffries do more good than their high speculations. Saint Paul, when he boasts of himself, he doth oft interlace, "I speak like a fool;" but speaking of his calling, he saith, "I magnify my apostleship, or I glory in my apostleship."
Of Vain Glory.

It was prettily devised of Æsop: "The fly sate upon the axle-tree of the chariot-wheel, and said, 'What a dust do I raise?'" So there are some vain persons, that whatsoever goeth alone, or moveth upon greater means, if they have never so little hand in it, they think it is they that carry it. They that are glorious, must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. They must needs be violent, to make good their own vaunts. Neither can they be secret, and therefore not effectual; but according to the French proverb, "Beaucoup de bruit;" "Much cry, little wool." Yet certainly there is use of this quality in civil affairs. Where there is an opinion and fame to be created, either of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters. Again, as Titus Livius noteth in the case of Antiochus, and the Ætolians, "There are sometimes great effects of cross lies:" as if a man that negotiates between two princes, to draw them to join in a war against the third, doth extol the forces of either of them above measure, the one to the other. And sometimes he that deals between man and man, raiseth his own credit with both, by pretending greater interest than he hath in either. And in these and the like kinds, it often falls out, that somewhat is produced of nothing; for lies are sufficient to breed opinion, and opinion brings on substance. In military commanders and soldiers, Vain Glory is an essential point: for as iron sharpens iron, so by Glory one courage sharpeneth another. In cases of great enterprise, upon charge and adventure, a composition of glorious natures doth put life into business; and those that are of solid and sober natures have more of the ballast than of the sail. In fame of learning the flight will be slow, without some feathers of ostentation. "They who write books concerning the contempt of Glory, yet inscribe their name in them." Socrates, Aristotle, Galen, were men full of ostentation. Certainly Vain Glory helpeth to perpetuate a man's memory; and virtue was never so beholden to human nature, as it received his due at the second hand. Neither had the fame of Cicero, Seneca, Plinius Secundus, borne her age so well, if it had not been joined with some vanity in themselves: like unto varnish that makes ceilings not only shine, but last. But all this while, when I speak of Vain Glory, I mean not of that property that Tacitus doth attribute to Mucianus: "By a peculiar art of his own, he was a great display of every thing which he said or did;" for that proceeds not of vanity, but of natural magnanimity and discretion; and in some persons, is not only comely, but gracious. For excusatons, cessions, modesty itself, well governed, are but arts of ostentation. And amongst those arts, there is none better than that which Plinius Secundus speaketh of, which is to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. For, saith Pliny very wittily: "In commending another, you do yourself right: for he that you commend, is either superior to you, in that you commend, or inferior. If he be inferior, if he be to be commended, you much more: if he be superior, if he be not to be commended, you much less glorious." Men are the scorn of wise men, the admiration of fools, the idols of parasites, and the slaves of their own vaunts.
OF HONOUR AND REPUTATION. 203

Of Honour and Reputation.

The winning of Honour is but the revealing of man's virtue and worth without disadvantage. For some in their actions do woo and affect Honour and Reputation; which sort of men are commonly much talked of, but inwardly little admired. And some, contrariwise, darken their virtue in the show of it, so as they be undervalued in opinion. If a man perform that which hath not been attempted before, or attempted and given over, or hath been achieved, but not with so good circumstance, he shall purchase more Honour, than by affecting a matter of great difficulty or virtue, wherein he v
OF HONOUR AND REPUTATION.

but a follower. If a man so temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction or combination of people, the music will be the fuller. A man is an ill husband of his Honour that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with fascets. And therefore let a man contend to excel any competitors of his in Honour, in out-shooting them, if he can, in their own bow. Discreet followers and servants help much to reputation: "All reputation emanates or takes its rise from our domestics." Envy, which is the canker of Honour, is best extinguished, by declaring a man's self, in his ends, rather to seek merit than fame; and by attributing a man's successes rather to divine providence and felicity, than to his own virtue or policy. The true marshalling of the degrees of sovereign honour are these: In the first place are, Conditores Imperiorum, Founders of States and Commonwealths; such as were Romulus, Cyrus, Cæsar, Ottoman, Ismael. In the second place are, Legislators, Lawgivers; which are also called Second Founders, or Perpetui Principes, because they govern by their ordinances after they are gone; such were Lycurgus, Solon, Justinian, Edgar, Alphousus of Castile, the Wise, that made the Siete Patridas. In the third place are Liberatores or Salvatores; such as compound the long miseries of civil wars, or deliver their countries from servitude of strangers or tyrants; as Augustus Cæsar, Vespasianus, Aurelianus, Theodoricus; King Henry the Seventh of England; King Henry the Fourth of France. In the fourth place are Propagatores, or Propugnatores Imperti: such as in honourable wars enlarge their territories, or make noble defence against invaders. And in the last place are Patres Patriae, which reign justly, and make the times good, wherein they live. Both which last kinds need no examples; they are in such number. Degrees of Honour in subjects are: first, Participes Curarum, those upon whom princes do discharge the greatest weight of their affairs, their right-hands as we call them. The next are Duces Belli, Great Leaders, such as are princes' lieutenants, and do them notable services in the wars. The third are Gratiosi, favourites, such as need not this scantling, to be solace to the sovereign, and harmless to the people. And the fourth Negotiis Pares, such as have great places under princes, and execute their places with sufficiency. There is an Honour likewise which may be ranked amongst the greatest, which happeneth rarely, that is, of such as sacrifice themselves to death or danger for the good of their country; as was M. Regulus, and the two Decii.
Of Judicature.

Judges ought to remember, that their office is jus dicere, and not jus dare: to interpret law, and not to make law, or give law. Else will it be like the authority claimed by the Church of Rome, which, under pretext of exposition of Scripture, doth not stick to add and alter, and to pronounce that which they do not find, and by show of antiquity to introduce novelty. Judges ought to be more learned than witty; more reverend than plausible; and more advised than confident. Above all things integrity is their portion and proper virtue: "Cursed (saith the law) is he that removeth the land-mark." The mislayer of a meer-stone is to blame; but it is the unjust Judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amiss of lands and property. One foul sentence doth more hurt than many foul examples; for these do but corrupt the stream, the other corrupteth the fountain. So saith Solomon: "A muddied fountain, and a corrupted vein, is a just man failing in his cause against his adversary." The office of Judges may have reference unto the parties that sue; unto the advocates that plead; unto the clerks and ministers of Justice underneath them, and to the sovereign or state above them.
First, for the causes or parties that sue: "There be (saith the Scripture) that turn judgment into wormwood;" and surely there be also that turn it into vinegar; for injustice maketh it bitter, and delays make it sour. The principal duty of a Judge is to suppress force and fraud; whereof force is the more pernicious when it is open, and fraud when it is close and disguised. Add thereto contentious suits, which ought to be spewed out as the surfeit of courts. A Judge ought to prepare his way to a just sentence, as God useth to prepare his way by raising valleys, and taking down hills. So when there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, combination, power, great counsel, then is the virtue of a Judge seen, to make inequality equal, that he may plant his Judgment as upon an even ground. "He who wipes hard, makes the blood start;" and where the wine-press is hard wrought, it yields a harsh wine that tastes of the grape-stone. Judges must beware of hard constructions, and strained inferences; for there is no worse torture than the torture of laws; specially, in case of laws penal; they ought to have care, that that which was meant for terror, be not turned into rigour; and that they bring not upon the people that shower whereof the Scripture speaketh, "He shall rain snares upon them:" for penal laws pressed are a shower of snares upon the people. Therefore let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if they be grown unfit for the present time, be by wise Judges confined in the execution: "It is the duty of the Judge to execute the laws in such a manner as to suit the temper of the times." In causes of life and death, Judges ought (as far as the law permit-teth) in justice to remember mercy; and to cast a severe eye upon the example, but a merciful eye upon the person.

Secondly, for the advocates and counsel that plead; patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of Justice, and an over-speaking Judge is no well-tuned cymbal. It is no grace to a Judge, first to find that which he might have heard in due time from the bar, or to show quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short, or to prevent informations by questions though pertinent. The parts of a Judge in hearing are four:—to direct the evidence; to moderate length, repetition, or impertinency of speech; to recapitulate, select, and collate the material points of that which hath been said; and to give the rule or sentence. Whatsoever is above these, is too much; and proceedeth either of glory and willingness to speak, or of impatience to hear, or of shortness of memory, or of want of a stayed and equal attention. It is a strange thing to see, that the boldness of advocates should prevail with Judges; whereas they should imitate God, in whose seat they sit, who "repress-eth the presumptuous, and giveth grace to the modest." But it is more strange, that Judges should have noted favourites; which cannot but cause multiplication of fees, and suspicion of by-ways.
There is due from the Judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled, and fair pleaded; especially towards the side which obtaineth not; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. There is likewise due to the public a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning counsel, gross neglect, slight information, indiscreet pressing, or an over-bold defence. And let not the counsel at the bar chop with the Judge, nor wind himself into the handling of the cause anew, after the Judge hath declared his sentence: but on the other side, let not the Judge meet the cause half way, nor give occasion to the party to say, his counsel or proofs were not heard.

Thirdly, for that that concerns clereks and ministers. The place of Justice is an hallowed place, and therefore not only the bench, but the foot-pace, and precincts, and purrise thereof ought to be preserved without scandal and corruption. For certainly "grapes (as the Scripture saith) will not be gathered of thorns or thistles;" neither can Justice yield her fruit with sweetness amongst the briars and brambles of catching and poling clerks and ministers. The attendance of Courts is subject to four bad instruments: first, certain persons that are sowers of suits which make the court swell, and the country pine. The second sort is, of those that engage Courts in quarrels of jurisdiction, and are not truly "the friends of the Court," but the "parasites of the Court," in puffing a Court up beyond her bounds, for their own scraps and advantage. The third sort is, of those that may be accounted the left hands of Courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain and direct courses of Courts, and bring Justice into oblique lines and labyrinths. And the fourth is, the poller and exacter of fees, which justifies the common resemblance of the Courts of Justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of his fleece. On the other side, an ancient clerk, skilful in precedents, wary in proceeding, and understanding in the business of the Court, is an excellent finger of a Court, and doth many times point the way to the Judge himself.

T 3

Fourthly, for that which may concern the Sovereign and Estate. Judges ought above all to remember the conclusion of the Roman twelve tables,
"The safety of the people is the prime object of all laws;" and to know, that laws, except they be in order to that end, are but things captious, and oracles not well inspired. Therefore it is an happy thing in a State, when Kings and States do often consult with Judges; and again, when Judges do often consult with the King and State: the one, when there is a matter of law intervenient in business of state; the other, when there is some consideration of state intervenient in matter of law. For many times the things deduced to Judgment may be meum and tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may trench to point of Estate. I call matter of Estate not only the parts of Sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. And let no man weakly conceive, that just laws and true policy have any antipathy: for they are like spirits and sinews, that one moves with the other. Let Judges also remember, that Solomon's throne was supported by lions on both sides: let them be lions, but yet lions under the throne; being circumspect, that they do not check or oppose any points of sovereignty. Let not Judges also be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them as a principal part of their office, a wise use and application of laws; for they may remember what the Apostle saith of a greater law than theirs, "We know that the law is good, only let every one execute it legally," i.e. with discretion and mercy.

Of Anger.

To seek to extinguish Anger utterly, is but a bravery of the Stoics. We have better oracles: "Be angry, but sin not. Let not the sun go down upon your Anger." Anger must be limited and confined, both in race and time. We will first speak, how the natural inclination and habit to be angry may be attempted and calmed. Secondly, how the particular motions of Anger may be repressed, or at least refrained from doing mischief. Thirdly, how to raise Anger, or appease Anger in another.

For the first: there is no other way but to meditate and ruminate well upon the effects of Anger, how it troubles man's life. And the best time to do this is, to look back upon Anger, when the fit is thoroughly over. Seneca saith well, "That Anger is like ruin, which breaks itself upon that it falls."
The Scripture exhorteth us, "to possess our souls in patience." Whosoever is out of patience, is out of possession of his soul. Men must not turn bees,

"And leave their souls in the wound."
OF ANGER.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns; children, women, old folks, sick folks. Only men must beware, that they carry their Anger rather with scorn, than with fear: so that they may seem rather to be above the injury, than below it, which is a thing easily done, if a man will give law to himself in it.

For the second point. The causes and motives of Anger are chiefly three: first, to be too sensible of hurt: for no man is angry that feels not himself hurt; and therefore tender and delicate persons must needs be often angry; they have so many things to trouble them, which more robust natures have little sense of. The next is, the apprehension and construction of the injury offered, to be in the circumstances thereof full of contempt. For contempt is that which putteth an edge upon Anger, as much or more than the hurt itself: and therefore when men are ingenious in picking out circumstances of contempt, they do kindle their Anger much. Lastly, opinion of the touch of a man's reputation doth multiply and sharpen Anger: wherein the remedy is, that a man should have, as Gonsalvo was wont to say, "His web of honour thicker than to be pierced by any imaginary contempt." But in all refraintings of Anger, it is the best remedy to win time, and to make a man's self believe that the opportunity of his revenge is not yet come; but that he foresees a time for it, and so to still himself in the mean time, and reserve it.

To contain Anger from mischief, though it take hold of a man, there be two things, whereof you must have special caution: the one, of extreme bitterness of words, especially if they be aculeate and proper; for "reproaches of a common sort" are nothing so much. And again, that in Anger a man reveal no secrets; for that makes him not fit for society. The other, that you do not peremptorily break off in any business in a fit of Anger; but howsoever you show bitterness, do not act any thing that is not revocable.

For raising, and appeasing, Anger in another: it is done chiefly by choosing of times, when men are frowardest and worst disposed, to incense them; again, by gathering (as was touched before) all that you can find out to aggravate the contempt. And the two remedies are by the contraries: the former, to take good times, when first to relate to a man an angry business; for the first impression is much; and the other is, to sever as much as may be the construction of the injury from the point of contempt; imputing it to misunderstanding, fear, passion, or what you will,
Of Vicissitude of Things.

Solomon saith, "There is no new thing upon the earth." So that as Plato had an imagination, "that all knowledge was but a remembrance!" so Solomon giveth his sentence, "that all novelty is but oblivion:" whereby you may see, that the river of Lethe runneth as well above ground as below. There is an abstruse astrologer that saith, "If it were not for two things that are constant, (the one is, that the fixed stars ever stand at like distance one from another, and never come nearer together, nor go further asunder; the other, that the diurnal motion perpetually keepeth time) no individual would last one moment." Certain it is, that the matter is in a perpetual flux, and never at a stay. The great winding-sheets that bury all things in oblivion, are two; deluges and earthquakes. As for conflagrations and great droughts, they do not merely dispeople, but destroy. Phaëton's car went but a day: and the three years' drought, in the time of Elias, was but particular, and left people alive. As for the great burnings by lightnings, which are often in the West Indies, they are but narrow. But in the other two destructions, by deluge and earthquake, it is further to be noted, that the remnant of people which hap to be reserved, are commonly ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past; so that the oblivion is all one, as if none had been left. If you consider well of the people of the West Indies, it is very probable that they are a newer or younger people, than the people of the old world. And it is much more likely, that the destruction that hath heretofore been there, was not by earthquakes, (as the Egyptian priest told Solon, concerning the Island of Atlantis, "that it was swallowed by an earthquake"): but rather, it was desolated by a particular deluge; for earthquakes are seldom in those parts. But on the other side, they have such pouring rivers, as the rivers of Asia, and Africa, and Europe, are but brooks to them. Their Andes likewise, or mountains, are far higher than those with us; whereby it seems, that the remnants of generations of men were in such a particular deluge saved. As for the observation that Machiavel hath, that the jealousy of sects doth much extinguish the memory of things,—traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay to extinguish all heathen antiquities; I do not find that those zeals do any great effects, nor last long; as it appeared in the succession of Sabinian, who did revive the former antiquities.

The Vicissitude or mutations in the superior globe, are no fit matter for this present argument.
It may be, Plato's great year, if the world should last so long, would have some effect; not in renewing the state of like individuals, (in unison with those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than indeed they have) but in gross. Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things: but they are rather gazed upon, and waited upon in their journey, than wisely observed in their effects, especially in their respective effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude, colour, version of the beams, placing in the region of heaven, or lasting, produceth particular effects.

There is a toy of which I have heard, and I would not have it slighted, but considered a little—they say it is observed in the Low Countries, (I know not in what part) that every five-and-thirty years, the same kind and suit of years and weathers comes about again, as great frosts, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat, and the like; and they call it the prime. It is a thing I do rather mention, because, computing backwards, I have found some concurrence.

But to leave these points of nature, and come to men. The greatest Vicissitude of things amongst men, is, the Vicissitude of sects and religions: for those orbs rule in men's minds most. The true religion is built upon the rock, the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. To speak therefore of the causes of new sects, and to give some counsel concerning them, as far as the weakness of human judgment can give stay to so great revolutions.

When the religion, formerly received, is rent by discords; and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may expect the springing up of a new sect, if then also there should arise any extravagant and strange spirit to make himself author thereof: all which points held, when Mahomet published his law. If a new sect have not two properties, fear it not; for it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting or the opposing of authority established: for nothing is more popular than that. The other is, the giving licence to pleasures and voluptuous life. For as for speculative heresies, (such as were in ancient times the Arrians, and now the Arminians) though they work mightily upon men's wits, yet they do not produce any great alteration in States, except it be by the help of civil occasions. There be three manner of plantations of new sects; by the power of signs and miracles; by the eloquence and wisdom of speech and persuasion; and by the sword: for martyrdoms, I reckon them amongst miracles, because they seem to exceed the strength of human nature; and I may do the like of superlative and admirable holiness of life. Surely there is no better way to stop the rising of new sects and schisms, than to reform abuses, to compound the smaller differences, to proceed mildly, and not with sanguinary persecutions; and rather to conciliate the principal authors by winning and advancing them, than to enrage them by violence and bitterness.

The changes and vicissitude in wars are many, but chiefly in three things: in the seats or stages of the war; in the weapons; and in the manner of the conduct. Wars in ancient time seemed more to move from East to West: for the Persians, Assyrians, Arabians, Tartars, (which are the invaders) were all Eastern people. It is true, the Gauls were Western, but we read but of two incursions of theirs, the one to Gallo-Græcia, the other to Rome. But East and West have no certain points of Heaven; and no more have the wars, either from the East or West, any certainty of observation. But North and South are fixed, and it hath seldom or never been seen that the far Southern people have invaded the Northern, but contrarywise. Whereby it is manifest, that the Northern tract of the world is in nature the more martial region; be it in respect of the stars of that hemisphere, or of the great continents that are upon the North, whereas the Southern tract, for aught that is known, is almost all sea; or (which is most apparent) of the cold of the Northern parts, which is that which, without aid of discipline, doth make the bodies hardest, and the courages warmest.

Upon the breaking and shivering of a great State and Empire, you may be sure to have wars. For great Empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces; and then when they fail also, all goes to ruin, and they become a prey. So was it in the decay of the Roman Empire; and likewise in the Empire of Almain, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather; and also not unlike to befall to Spain if it should break. The great accessions and unions of kingdoms do likewise stir up wars. For when a State grows to an over-power, it is like a great flood that will be sure to overflow: as it hath been seen in the States of Rome, Turkey, Spain, and others. Look when the world hath fewest barbarous people, but such as commonly will not marry or generate, except they know means to live, (as it is almost every where at this day, except Tartary), there is no danger of inundations of people: but when there be great shoals of people, which go on to populate without foreseeing means of life and sustentation, it is of necessity that once in an age or two, they discharge a portion of their people upon other nations, which the ancient Northern people were wont to do by lot, casting lots what part should stay at home, and what should seek their fortunes. When a warlike State grows soft and effeminate, they may be sure of a war; for commonly such States are grown rich in the time of their degenerating; and so the prey inviteth, and their decay in valour encourageth a war.

As for the weapons, it hardly falleth under rule and observation; yet we see even they have returns and vicissitudes. For certain it is, that ordnance was known in the city of the Oxydrakes in India; and was that which the Macedonians called thunder and lightning, and magic. And it is well known, that the use of ordnance hath been in China above 2000 years. The conditions of weapons, and their improvement, are,—first, the striking afar off; for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets. Secondly, the strength of the percussion, wherein likewise ordnance do exceed all battering rams, and ancient inventions. The third is, the commodious use of them; as that they may serve in all weathers, that the carriage may be light and manageable, and the like.

For the conduct of the war: at the first, men rested extremely upon number; they did put the wars likewise upon main force and valour, pointing days for pitched fields, and so trying it out upon an even match; and they were more ignorant in ranging and arraying their battles. After they grew to rest upon number, rather competent than vast, they grew to advantage of place, cunning diversions, and the like; and they grew more skilful in the ordering of their battles.

In the youth of a State, arms do flourish; in the middle age of a State, learning; and then both of them together for a time: in the declining age of a State, mechanical arts, and merchandize. Learning hath his infancy when it is but beginning, and almost childish; then his youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then his strength of years, when it is solid and reduced; and lastly, his old age; when it waxeth dry and exhausted. But it is not good to look too long upon these turning wheels of Vicissitude, lest we become giddy. As for the philology of them, that is but a circle of tales, and therefore not fit for this writing.

A Fragment of an Essay of Fame.

The poets make Fame a monster. They describe her, in part, finely and elegantly; and in part, gravely and sententiously. They say—Look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath: so many tongues; so many voices; she pricks up so many ears.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables; as, that she gathereth strength in going; that she goeth upon the ground, and yet hideth her head in the clouds. That in the day-time she sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night: that she mingleneth things done, with things not done; and that she is a terror to great cities: but that which passeth all the rest is, they do recount that the Earth, mother of the giants, that made war against Jupiter, and were by him destroyed, thereupon, in anger; brought forth Fame: for certain it is, that rebels figured by the giants and seditious fames, and libels, are but brothers and sisters, masculine and feminine. But now if a man can tame this monster, and bring her to feed at the hand, and govern her, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. But we are infected with the style of the poets. To speak now in a sad and serious manner: there is not in all the politics, a place less handled, and more worthy to be handled, than this of Fame. We will therefore speak of these points: What are false Fames; and what are true Fames; and how they may be best discerned; how Fames may be sown and raised; how they may be spread and multiplied, and how they may be checked and laid dead; and other things concerning the nature of Fame. Fame is of such force, that there is scarcely any great action wherein it hath not a great part, especially in the war. Mucianus undid Vitellius by a fame that he scattered—that Vitellius had in purpose to remove the legions of Syria into Germany, and the legions of Germany into Syria: whereupon the legions of Syria were infinitely inflamed. Julius Cæsar took Pompey unprovided, and laid asleep his industry and preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out,—how Cæsar's own soldiers loved him not; and being wearied with the wars, and laden with the spoils of Gaul, would forsake him as soon as he came into Italy. Livia settled all things for the succession of her son Tiberius, by continual giving out, that her husband Augustus was upon recovery and amendment. And it is an usual thing with the Bashaws, to conceal the death of the Great Turk from the Janizaries and men of war, to save the sacking of Constantinople, and other towns, as their manner is. Themistocles made Xerxes, king of Persia, post apace out of Græcia, by giving out that the Græcians had a purpose to break his bridge of ships, which he had made athwart Hellespont. There be a thousand such like examples; and the more they are, the less they need to be repeated, because a man meeteth with them every where: therefore let all wise governors have as great a watch and care over Fames, as they have of the actions and designs themselves.

Character of Julius Cæsar.

JULIUS CÆSAR was partaker at first of an exercised fortune, which turned to his benefit; for it abated the haughtiness of his spirit, and whetted his industry. He had a mind, turbulent in his desires and affections; but in his judgment and understanding very serene and placid: and this apppears by his easy deliverances of himself, both in his transactions and in his speech; for no man ever resolved more swiftly, or spake more perspicuously and plainly. There was nothing forced or difficult in his expressions. But in his will and appetite, he was of that condition, that he never rested in those things he had gotten; but still thirsted and pursued after new; yet so, that he would not rush into new affairs rashly, but settle and make an end of the former, before he atttempted fresh acti: so that he would put a seasonable period to all his undertakings. And therefore, though he won many battles in Spain, and weakened their forces by degrees; yet he would not give over, nor despise the reliques of the civil war there, till he had seen all things composed.
but then as soon as that was done, and the state settled, instantly he advanced in his expedition against the Parthians.

He was, no doubt, of a very noble mind; but yet such as aimed more at his own particular advancement than at any merits for the common good. For he referred all things to himself; and was the true and perfect centre of all his own actions. By which means, being so fast tied to his ends, he was still prosperous, and prevailed in his purposes; insomuch that neither country, nor religion, nor good turns done him, nor kindred, nor friendship, diverted his appetite, or bridled him from pursuing his own ends. Neither was he much inclined to works of perpetuity: for he established nothing for the future; he founded no sumptuous buildings; he procured to be enacted no wholesome laws; but still minded himself, and so his thoughts were confined within the circle of his own life. He sought indeed after fame and reputation, because he thought they might be profitable to his designs: otherwise, in his inward thoughts, he propounded to himself rather absoluteness of power, than honour and fame. For as for honour and fame, he pursued not after them for themselves; but because they were the instruments of power and greatness. And therefore he was carried on through a natural inclination, not by any rules that he had learned, to affect the sole command; and rather to enjoy the same, than to seem worthy of it. And by this means he won much reputation amongst the people, who are no valuers of true worth: but amongst the nobility and great men, who were tender of their own honours, it procured him no more than this, that he incurred the brand of an ambitious and daring man.

Neither did they much err from the truth who thought him so; for he was by nature exceeding bold; and never did put on any show of modesty, except it were for some purposes. Yet, notwithstanding, he so attempered his boldness, that it neither impeached him of rashness, nor was burren-some to men; nor rendered his nature suspected; but was conceived to flow out of an innate sincerity and freeness of behaviour, and the nobility of his birth: and in all other things he passed; not for a crafty and deceitful person, but for an open-hearted and plain-dealing man. And whereas he was indeed an arch-politician, that could counterfeit and dissemble sufficiently well, and was wholly compounded of frauds and deceits; so that there was nothing sincere in him, but all artificial; yet he covered and disguised himself so, that no such vices appeared to the world; but he was generally reputed to proceed plainly and uprightly with all men. Howbeit, he did not stoop to any petty and mean artifices, as they do, which are ignorant in state employments, and depend not so much upon the strength of their own wits, as upon the counsels and brains of others, to support their authority: for he was skilled in the turnings of all human affairs; and transacted all matters, especially those of high consequence, by himself, and not by others.

He was singularly skilful to avoid envy; and found it not impertinent to his ends, to decline that, though it were with some diminution of his dignity. For aiming at a real power, he was content to pass by all vain pomp and outward shows of power throughout his whole life; till at the last, whether high-flown with the continual exercise of power, or corrupted with flatteries, he affected the ensigns of power (the style and diadem of a king), which was the bait that wrought his overthrow.

This is true, that he harboured the thoughts of a kingdom from his very youth: and hereunto the example of Sylla, and the kindred of Marius, and his emulation of Pompey, and the corruption and ambition of the times, did prick him forward: but then he paved his way to a kingdom, after a wonderful and strange manner. As first, by a popular and seditious power; afterwards, by a military power, and that of a general in war. For there was required to effect his ends—first, that he should break the power and authority of the senate; which, as long as it stood firm, was adverse, and an hindrance, that no man could climb to sovereignty and imperial command. Then the power of Crassus and Pompey was to be subdued and quelled, which could not be done otherwise than by arms. And therefore (as the most cunning contriver of his own fortune) he laid his first foundation by bribes; by corrupting the Courts of Justice; by renewing the memory of Caius Marius, and his party; for most of the senators and nobility were of Sylla’s faction: by the law of distributing the fields amongst the common people; by the sedition of the tribunes, where he was the author: by the madness and fury of Catiline, and the conspirators, unto which action he secretly blew the coals! By the banishment of Cicero, which was the greatest blow to the authority of the senate, as might be; and several other the like arts: but most of all by the conjunction of Crassus and Pompey, both betwixt themselves, and with him; which was the thing that finished the work.

Having accomplished this part, he betook himself to the other; which was to make use of, and to enjoy his power. For, being made Proconsul of France for five years, and afterwards continuing it for five years more, he furnished himself with arms and legions, and the power of a warlike and opulent province; as was formidable to Italy.

Neither was he ignorant, that after he had strengthened himself with arms, and a military power, neither Crassus nor Pompey could ever be able to bear up against him; whereof the one trusted to his great riches, the other to his fame and reputation: the one decayed through age, the other in power and authority; and neither of them were grounded upon true and lasting foundations. And the rather, for that he had obliged all the senators and magistrates, and, in a word, all those that had any power in the Commonwealth, so firmly to himself, with private benefits, that he was fearless of any combination or opposition against his designs, till he had openly invaded the imperial power.

Which thing, though he always bare in his mind, and at the last acted it, yet he did not lay down his former person; but coloured things so, that what with the reasonableness of his demands, what with his pretences of peace, and what with the moderate use of his successes, he turned all the envy of the adverse party, and seemed to take up arms upon necessity, for his own preservation and safety. But the falseness of this pretence manifestly appeared; inasmuch as, soon after having obtained the regal power, all civil wars being appeased, and all his rivals and opposites, which might put him to any fear, being removed out of the way by the stroke of death; notwithstanding, he never thought of resigning the Republic; no, nor ever made any show or offer of resigning the same. Which showed plainly, that his ambition of being a king was settled in him, and remained with him unto his last breath. For he did not lay hold upon occasions as they happened, but moulded and formed the occasions as himself pleased.

His chief abilities consisted in martial knowledge; in which he so excelled, that he could not only lead an army, but mould an army to his own liking. For he was not more skilful in managing affairs, than in winning of hearts. Neither did he affect this by any ordinary discipline; as by inuring them to fulfil all his commands; or by striking a shame into them to disobey, or by carrying a severe hand over them: but by such a way as did wonderfully stir up an alacrity and cheerfulness in them; and did in a sort assure him of the victory beforehand, and which did oblige the soldier to him, more than was fit for a free state. Now whereas he was versed in all kinds of martial knowledge, and joined civil arts with the arts of war; nothing came so suddenly, or so unlooked for upon him, but he had a remedy for it at hand; and nothing was so adverse, but that he could pick something for his turn and benefit out of it.

He stood sufficiently upon his state and greatness. For in great battles, he would sit at home in the head-quarter, and manage all things by messages; which wrought him a double benefit: First, that it secured his person more, and exposed him the less to danger: Secondly, that if at any time his army was worsted, he could put new spirit into them with his own presence, as by the addition of fresh forces, and turn the fortune of the day. In the conducting of his wars, he would not only follow precedents, but he was able to devise and pursue new stratagems, according as the accidents and occasions required.

He was constant, and singularly kind and indulgent in his friendships contracted. Notwithstanding, he made choice of such friends, as a man might easily see that he chose them to be instruments to his ends, and not obstructions to them. And whereas, by nature, and out of a firm resolution, he adhered to this principle,—not to be eminent amongst great and deserving men, but to be chief amongst inferiors and vassals; he chose only mean and active men, and such as to himself might be all in all. And hereupon grew that saying, "So let Cæsar live, though I die;" and other speeches of that kind. As for the nobility, and those that were his peers, he contracted friendship with such of them as might be useful to him; and admitted none to his cabinet council, but those that had their fortunes wholly depending upon him.

He was moderately furnished with good literature, and the arts; but in such sort as he applied his skill therein to civil policy. For he was well read in history; and was expert in rhetoric, and the art of speaking. And because he attributed much to his good stars, he would pretend more than an ordinary knowledge in astronomy. As for eloquence, and a prompt elocution, that was natural to him, and pure.

He was dissolute, and propense to voluptuousness and pleasures; which served well at first for a cover to his ambition: for no man would imagine, that a man so loosely given could harbour any ambitious and vast thoughts in his heart. Notwithstanding, he so governed his pleasures, that they were no hindrance, either to his profit, or to his business: and they did rather whet, than dull the vigour of his mind. He was temperate at his meals; free from niceness and curiosity in his lusts; pleasant and magnificent at public interludes.

Thus being accomplished, the same thing was the means of his downfall at last, which in his beginning was a step to his rise, I mean his affectation of popularity. For nothing more popular, than to forgive our enemies. Through which, either virtue or cunning, he lost his life.

A Civil Character of Augustus Cæsar.

AUGUSTUS CÆSAR (if ever any mortal man) was endued with a greatness of mind undisturbed with passions, clear and well ordered; which is evidenced by the high achievements which he performed in his early youth. For those persons which are of a turbulent nature or appetite, do commonly pass their youth in many errors; and about their middle, then and not before, they show forth their perfections: but those that are of a sedate and calm nature, may be ripe for great and glorious actions in their youth. And whereas the faculties of the mind, no less than the parts and members of the body, do consist and flourish in a good temper of health, and beauty, and strength; so he was, in the strength of the mind, inferior to his uncle Julius; but in the health and beauty of the mind, superior. For Julius being of an unquiet and uncomposed spirit; (as those who are troubled with the falling-sickness for the most part are), notwithstanding he carried on his own ends with much moderation and discretion, yet he did not order his ends well; propounding to himself vast and high designs, above the reach of a mortal man. But Augustus, as a man sober, and mindful of his mortality, seemed to propound no other ends to himself, than such as were orderly and well weighed, and governed by reason. For, first he was desirous indeed to have the rule and principality in his bands; then he sought to appear worthy of that power which he should acquire: next, to enjoy an high place, he accounted but a transitory thing: lastly, he endeavoured to do such actions as might continue his memory, and leave an impression of his good government to after ages. And therefore, in the beginning of his age, he affected power; in the middle of his age, honour and dignity; in the decline of his years, ease and pleasure; and in the end of his life, he was wholly bent to memory and posterity.
OF A KING.

Of a King.

1. A KING is a mortal god on earth, unto whom the living God hath lent his own name as a great honour; but withal told him, he should die like a man, lest he should be proud, and flatter himself that God hath with his name imparted unto him his nature also.

2. Of all kind of men, God is the least beholden unto them; for he doth most for them, and they do ordinarily least for him.
OF A KING.

3. A king that would not feel his crown too heavy for him, must wear it every day; but if he think it too light, he knoweth not of what metal it is made.

4. He must make religion the rule of government, and not to balance the scale; for he that casteth in religion only to make the scales even, his own weight is contained in those characters: "Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin;" "He is found too light, his kingdom shall be taken from him."

5. And that king that holds not religion the best reason of state, is void of all piety and justice, the supporters of a king.

6. He must be able to give counsel himself, but not rely thereupon; for though happy events justify their counsels, yet it is better that the evil event of good advice be rather imputed to a subject than a sovereign.

7. He is the fountain of honour, which should not run with a waste pipe, lest the courtiers sell the water; and then, as papists say of their holy wells, it loses the virtue.

8. He is the life of the law, not only as he is "a speaking law" himself, but because he animateth the dead letter, making it active towards all his subjects "by rewards and punishments."

9. A wise king must do less in altering his laws than he may; for new government is ever dangerous. "It being true in the body politic, as in the corporal, that "every sudden change is dangerous;"
and though it be for the better, yet it is not without a fearful apprehension; for he that changeth the fundamental laws of a kingdom, thinketh there is no good title to a crown but by conquest.

10. A king that setteth to sale seats of justice, oppresseth the people; for he teacheth his judges to sell justice; and "justice purchased by a bribe will be sold for a bribe."

11. Bounty and magnificence are virtues very regal, but a prodigal king is nearer a tyrant than a parsimonious; for store at home draweth not his contemplations abroad: but want supplieth itself of what is next, and many times the next way: a king herein must be wise, and know what he may justly do.

12. That king which is not feared, is not loved; and he that is well seen in his craft, must as well study to be feared as loved; yet not loved for fear, but feared for love.

13. Therefore, as he must always resemble him whose great name he beareth, and that as in manifesting the sweet influence of his mercy on the severe stroke of his justice sometimes, so in this not to suffer a man of death to live; for besides that the land doth mourn, the restraint of justice towards sin doth more retard the affection of love than the extent of mercy doth inflame it: and sure where love is [ill] bestowed, fear is quite lost.
14. His greatest enemies are, his flatterers; for though they ever speak on his side, yet their words still make against him.

15. The love which a king oweth to a weal public, should not be restrained to any one particular; yet that his more special favour do reflect upon some worthy ones, is somewhat necessary, because there are few of that capacity.

16. He must have a special care of five things, if he would not have his crown to be but to him infelix felicitas: "an unhappy felicity."

First, that "pretended sanctity" be not in the church; for that is "a two fold iniquity."

Secondly, that "unprofitable equity" sit not in the chancery; for that is "absurd pity."

Thirdly, that "profitable iniquity" keep not the exchequer; for "that is cruel robbery."

Fourthly, that "an incautious mind though faithful be not his general; for that will bring but "repentance when too late."

Fifthly, that "an affected prudence" be not his secretary; for that is "a snake in the grass."

To conclude: as he is of the greatest power, so he is subject to the greatest cares, made the servant of his people, or else he were without a calling at all.

He then that honoureth him not, is next an atheist, wanting the fear of God in his heart.
Short Notes for Civil Conversation.

1. To deceive men's expectations generally, with cautel, argueth a staid mind, and unexpected constancy: namely, in matters of fear, anger, sudden joy or grief, and all things which may affect or alter the mind in public or sudden accidents, or such like.

2. It is necessary to use a stedfast countenance, not wavering with action, as in moving the head or hand too much; which showeth a fantastical, light and fickle operation of the spirit, and consequently light mind as gesture: only it is sufficient, with leisure, to use a modest action in either.

3. In all kinds of speech, either pleasant, grave, severe, or ordinary, it is convenient to speak leisurely, and rather drawingly, than hastily; because hasty speech confounds the memory, and oftentimes, besides unseemliness, drives a man either to a non-plus or unseemly stammering, harping upon that which should follow; whereas a slow speech confirmeth the memory, addeth a conceit of wisdom to the hearers, besides a seemliness of speech and countenance.

4. To desire in discourse to hold all arguments, is ridiculous, wanting true judgment; for in all things no man can be exquisite.
5, 6. To have common places to discourse, and to want variety, is both tedious to the hearers, and shows a shallowness of conceit; therefore it is good to vary, and suit speeches with the present occasions; and to have a moderation in all our speeches, especially in jesting of religion, state, great persons, weighty and important business, poverty, or any thing deserving pity.

7. A long-continued speech, without a good speech of interlocution, showeth slowness: and a good reply, without a good set speech, showeth shallowness and weakness.

8. To use many circumstances, ere you come to the matter, is wearisome; and to use none at all, is but blunt.

9. Bashfulness is a great hindrance to a man, both in uttering his opinion, and understanding what is propounded unto him: wherefore it is good to press himself forward with discretion, both in speech, and company of the better sort.

UsuS promptos facit.

"Practice makes men ready."
Miscellaneous Sentences.

Collected from the writings of Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, Viscount St. Albans.

1. A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is.
2. Much bending breaks the bow; much unbending, the mind.
3. He conquers twice, who upon victory overcomes himself.
4. If vices were upon the whole matter profitable, the virtuous man would be the sinner.
5. He sleeps well, who feels not that he sleeps ill.
6. To deliberate about useful things, is the safest delay.
7. The flood of grief decreaseth, when it can swell no higher.
8. Pain makes even the innocent man a liar.
9. In desire, swiftness itself is delay.
10. The smallest hair casts a shadow.
11. He that has lost his faith, what has he left to live on?
12. A beautiful face is a silent commendation.
13. Fortune makes him a fool whom she makes her darling.
14. Fortune is not content to do a man but one ill turn.
242 MISCELLANEOUS SENTENCES.

16. The fortune which nobody sees, makes a man happy and unenvied.
16. O! what a miserable thing it is to be hurt by such a one of whom it is in vain to complain.
17. A man dies as often as he loses his friends.
18. The tears of an heir are laughter under a vizard.
19. Nothing is pleasant, to which variety does not give a relish.
20. He may bear envy, who is either courageous or happy.
21. None but a virtuous man can hope well in ill circumstances.
22. In taking revenge, the very haste we make is criminal.
23. When men are in calamity, if we do but laugh we offend.
24. He accuseth Neptune unjustly, who makes shipwreck a second time.
25. He that injures one, threatens an hundred.
26. All delay is ungrateful, but we are not wise without it.
27. Happy he who dies ere he calls for death to take him away.
28. An ill man is always ill; but he is then worst of all, when he pretends to be a saint.
29. Lock and key will scarce keep that secure, which pleases every body.
30. They think ill, who think of living always.
31. That sick man does ill for himself, who makes his physician his heir.
32. He of whom many are afraid, ought himself to fear many.
33. No fortune is so good, but it bates an ace.
34. It is part of the gift, if you deny genteelly what is asked of you.
35. The coward calls himself a wary man; and the miser says he is frugal.
36. O life! an age to him that is in misery; and to him that is happy, a moment.
37. It is a strange desire which men have, to seek power, and lose liberty.
38. Children increase the cares of life; but they mitigate the remembrance of death.
39. Round dealing is the honour of man's nature; and a mixture of falsehood is like alay in gold and silver, which may make the metal work the better; but it embaseth it.
40. Death openeth the gate to good fame, and extinguisheth envy.
41. Schism in the spiritual body of the church, is a greater scandal than a corruption in manners: as, in the natural body, a wound or solution of continuity is worse than a corrupt humour.
42. Revenge is a kind of wild justice, which the more a man's nature runs to, the more ought law to weed it out.

43. He that studieth revenge, keepeth his own wounds green.

44. Revengeful persons live and die like witches: their life is mischievous, and their end is unfortunate.

45. It is an high speech of Seneca, after the manner of the Stoics, that the good things which belong to prosperity, are to be wished; but the good things which belong to adversity, are to be admired.

46. He that cannot see well, let him go softly.

47. If a man be thought secret, it inviteth discovery; as the more close air sucketh in the more open.

48. Keep your authority wholly from your children, not so your purse.

49. Men of noble birth are noted to be envious towards new men when they rise: for the distance is altered; and it is like a deceit of the eye, that when others come on, they think themselves go back.

50. That envy is most malignant which is like Cain's, who envied his brother because his sacrifice was better accepted, when there was nobody but God to look on.

51. The lovers of great place are impatient of privateness, even in age, which requires the shadow: like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though there they offer age to scorn.

52. In evil, the best condition is, not to will: the next, not to can.

53. In great place, ask counsel of both times: of the ancient time, what is best; and of the latter time, what is fittest.

54. As in nature things move more violently to their place, and calmly in their place: so virtue in ambition is violent; in authority, settled and calm.

55. Boldness in civil business is like pronunciation in the orator of Demosthenes; the first, second, and third thing.

56. Boldness is blind: wherefore it is ill in counsel, but good in execution. For in counsel it is good to see dangers; in execution, not to see them, except they be very great.

57. Without good-nature, man is but a better kind of vermin.

58. God never wrought miracle to convince atheism, because his ordinary works convince it.

59. The great atheists indeed are hypocrites, who are always handling holy things, but without feeling; so as they must needs be cauterized in the end.

60. The master of superstition is the people. And in all superstition, wise men follow fools.
61. In removing superstitions, care should be had, that, as it fareth in ill purgings, the good be not taken away with the bad: which commonly is done when the people is the physician.

61. He that goeth into a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel.

62. It is a miserable state of mind, and yet it is commonly the case of kings, to have few things to desire, and many things to fear.

63. Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe.

64. All precepts concerning kings are, in effect, comprehended in these remembrances: remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicegerent; the one bridleth their power, and the other their will.

65. Things will have their first or second agitation: if they be not tossed upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tossed upon the waves of fortune.

66. The true composition of a counsellor is, rather to be skilled in his master's business than his nature; for then he is like to advise him, and not to feed his humour.

67. Private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reverend.
Miscellaneous Sentences

68. Fortune is like a market, where many times if you stay a little the price will fall.

69. Fortune sometimes turneth the handle of the bottle, which is easy to be taken hold of; and afterwards the belly, which is hard to grasp.

70. Generally it is good to commit the beginning of all great actions to Argus with an hundred eyes; and the ends of them to Briareus with an hundred hands; first to watch, and then to speed.

71. There is great difference betwixt a cunning man and a wise man. There be that can pack the cards, who yet cannot play well; they are good in canvasses and factions, and yet otherwise mean men.

72. Extreme self-lovers will set a man's house on fire, though it were but to roast their eggs.

73. New things, like strangers, are more admired, and less favoured.

74. It were good that men, in their innovations, would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived.

75. They that reverence too much old time, are but a scorn to the new.

76. The Spaniards and Spartans have been noted to be of small dispatch. Mi venga la muerte de Spagna. "Let my death come from Spain, for then it will be sure to be long in coming."
77. You had better take for business a man somewhat absurd, than over-formal.

78. Those who want friends to whom to open their griefs, are cannibals of their own hearts.

79. Number itself importeth not much in armies, where the people are of weak courage; for, as Virgil says, it never troubles a wolf how many the sheep be.

80. Let states that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast. In coppice woods, if you leave your staddles too thick, you shall never have clean underwood, but shrubs and bushes.

81. A civil war is like the heat of a fever; but a foreign war is like the heat of exercise, and serveth to keep the body in health.

82. Suspicions among thoughts, are like bats among birds; they ever fly by twilight.

83. Base natures, if they find themselves once suspected, will never be true.

84. Men ought to find the difference between saltiness and bitterness. Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others’ memory.

85. Discretion in speech is more than eloquence.

86. Men seem neither well to understand their riches nor their strength: of the former they believe greater things than they should, and of the latter much less. And from hence certain fatal pillars have bounded the progress of learning.

97. Riches are the baggage of virtue; they cannot be spared, nor left behind, but they hinder the march.

88. Great riches have sold more men than ever they have bought out.

89. Riches have wings, and sometimes they fly away of themselves, and sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more.

90. He that defers his charity until he is dead, is, if a man weighs it rightly, rather liberal of another man's, than of his own.

91. Ambition is like choler; if it can move, it makes men active; if it be stopped, it becomes adust, and makes men melancholy.

92. To take a soldier without ambition, is to pull off his spurs.

93. Some ambitious men seem as skreens to princes in matters of danger and envy. For no man will take such parts, except he be like the blinded dove, that mounts and mounts, because he cannot see about him.

94. Princes and states should choose such ministers as are more sensible of duty than of rising; and should discern a busy nature from a willing mind.

95. A man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds.
therefore let him seasonably water the one, and destroy the other.

96. If a man look sharply and attentively, he shall see fortune; for though she be blind, she is not invisible.

97. Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm or state into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties; at the end of the game, most of the money will be in the box.

98. Virtue is best in a body that hath rather digni-ity of presence, than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behaviour than virtue.

99. The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express.

100. He who builds a fair house upon an ill seat, commits himself to prison.

101. If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him.

102. Costly followers, among whom we may reckon those who are importunate in suits, are not to be liked; lest while a man maketh his train longer, he make his wings shorter.

103. Fame is like a river, that beareth up things light and swollen, and drowns things weighty and solid.

104. Seneca saith well, that anger is like ruin, which breaks itself upon that it falls on.

105. Excusations, cessions, modesty itself, well governed, are but arts of ostentation.

106. High treason is not in ice; that when the body melteth, the impression should go away.

107. The best governments are always subject to be like the fairest crystals, wherein every icicle or grain is seen, which in a fouler stone is never perceived.

108. Hollow church papists are like the roots of nettles, which themselves sting not; but yet they bear all the stinging leaves.

Of the Choice of Good and Evil.

A Fragment.

Search for, and practice Truth.

In deliberating, the point to be considered is, what is Good, and what is Evil; and of Good what is greater; and of Evil what is less.

So that the persuader's labour, is to make things appear Good or Evil, and that in a higher or lower degree; which as it may be performed by true and solid reasons, so it may be represented also by appearances, generalities, and circumstances, which are of such force, as to sway the ordinary judgment either of a weak man, or of a wise man, not fully and considerately attending and pondering the matter. Besides their power to alter the nature of the subject in appearance, and so to lead to error, they are of no less use to quicken and strengthen the opinions and persuasions which are true: for reasons plainly delivered, and always after one manner, especially with fine and fastidious minds, enter but heavily and dully; whereas if they be varied, and have more life and vigour put into them by these forms and insinuations, they cause a stronger apprehension, and many times suddenly win the mind to a resolution. Lastly, to make a true and safe judgment, nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind, than the discovering and confuting of these appearances, showing in what cases they hold, and in what they deceive; which as it cannot be done, but out of a very universal knowledge of the nature of things; yet being performed, it so cleareth man's judgment and election, that he is the less apt to slide into any error.
OF GOOD AND EVIL.

Table of the Heads, or Sections, on the Appearances of Good and Evil, with their Degrees, as Places of Persuasion and Dissuasion, &c. &c.

1. SINCE all parties, or sects, challenge the pre-eminence of the first place to themselves; that to which all the rest with one consent give the second place, seems to be better than the others. For every one seems to take the first place out of zeal to himself; but to give the second where it is really due.

2. That kind is altogether best, whose excellence, or pre-eminence is best.

3. That which hath a relation to Truth, is greater than that which refers to Opinion. But the measure, and trial of that which belongs to Opinion, is this:—It is that which a man would not do, if he thought it would not be known.

4. That which keeps a matter safe and entire, is good; but what is destitute and unprovided of retreat, is bad. For whereas all ability of acting is good; not to be able to withdraw oneself, is a kind of impotency.

5. That which consists of more parts, and those divisible, is greater, and more One, than what is made up of fewer; for all things when they are looked upon piece-meal, seem greater; also when a plurality of parts makes a show of a bulk considerable. Which a plurality of parts effects more strongly, if they be in no certain order; for it then resembles an infinity, and hinders the comprehending of them. 261
OF THE CHOICE

6. That, whose privation (or the want of which) is Good, is in itself Evil: that, whose privation (or the want whereof) is an Evil, is in itself Good. 266

7. What is near to Good, is Good; what is at distance from Good, is Evil. 267

8. That which a man hath procured by his own default, is a greater mischief (or Evil):
that which is laid on him by others, is a lesser Evil, 270

9. That which is gotten by our own pains and industry, is a greater Good: that which comes by another man's courtesy, or the indulgence of Fortune, is a lesser Good. 273

10. The degree of privation seems greater than the degree of diminution: and again, the degree of inception (or beginning) seems greater than the degree of increase, 276

11. That which men commend and celebrate, is Good; that which they dispraise and repre-hend, is Evil. 279

12. That which draws commendation even from enemies, is a great Good; but that which is reprehended even by friends, is a great Evil. 280 SECTION I.

"Since all parties, or sects, challenge the pre-eminence of the first place to themselves; that, to which all the rest with one consent give the second place, seems to be better than the others. For every one seems to take the first place out of zeal to himself, but to give the second where it is really due."

So Cicero went about to prove the sect of Academics, which suspended all asseveration, to be the best. "For (saith he) ask a Stoic, which Philosophy is true, he will prefer his own: then ask him, which approacheth (next) the truth, he will confess, the Academics. So deal with the Epicure, that will scarce endure the Stoic to be in sight of him; so soon as he hath placed himself, he will place the Academics next him."

So, if a prince took divers competitors to a place, and examined them severally, whom next themselves they would chiefly commend; it were like the ablest man should have the most second voices.

The fallacy of this appearance happeneth often in respect of Envy; for men are accustomed, after themselves, and their own fashion, to incline unto them which are softest, and are least in their way, in despite and derogation of them that hold them.
hardest to it. So that this appearance of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of enervation and weakness.

SECTION 2.

"That kind is altogether best, whose excellence or pre-eminence is best."

Appertaining to this are the forms: "Let us not wander in generalities; let us compare particular with particular," &c. This appearance, though it seem of strength, and rather logical than rhetorical, yet is very often a fallacy.

Sometimes, because some things are in kind very dangerous; which, if they escape, prove excellent; so that the kind is inferior, because it is so subject to peril: but that which is excellent, being proved, is superior. As the blossom of March, and the blossom of May, whereof the French verse goeth:

"Burgeon de Mars, enfans de Paris, * Si un eschape, bien vaut dis."

So that the blossom of May is generally better than the blossom of March; and yet the best blossom of March is better than the best blossom of May.

Sometimes, because the nature of some kinds is to be more equal, and more indifferent, and not to have very distant degrees: as hath been noted in the warmer climates, the people are generally more wise; but in the northern climate, particular wits are greater. So in many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it were tried by the gross, it would go on the other side. For excellencies go as it were by chance; but kinds go by a more certain nature, as by discipline in war.

* The buds of March are like Paris children—if one escapes it is worth ten others.

Lastly, many kinds have much refuse, which countervail that which they have excellent; and therefore generally metal is more precious than stone: and yet a diamond is more precious than gold.

SECTION 3.

"That which hath relation to Truth, is greater than that which refers to Opinion. But the measure and trial of that which belongs to Opinion, is this: It is that which a man would not do, if he thought it would not be known."

So the Epicures say to the Stoics' Felicity placed in Virtue, that it is like the felicity of a player, who, if he were left by his auditors, and their applause, would straight be out of heart and countenance; and therefore they call Virtue, *bonum thantrale; that is, "a stage good." But of Riches the poet saith:

"Me people hiss abroad,
But I myself applaud."

And of Pleasure,

"Your welcome joys within let stifled lie;
But counterfeit abroad, a modesty."

The fallacy of this appearance is somewhat subtle, though the answer to the example be ready: for Virtue is not chosen propter aurem popularem, for the applause of the people; but contrariwise, Maxime omnium teipsum reverere, a man ought to stand most in awe of himself; so that a virtuous man will be virtuous in private, and not in public only: though perchance it will be more strong by glory and fame; as an heat, which is doubled by reflection. But that denieth the supposition, it doth not reprehend the fallacy, whereof the reprehension is a law, that Virtue (such as is joined with labour and conflict) would not be chosen, but for Fame and Opinion: yet it followeth not, that the chief motive of the election should not be real, and for itself; for Fame may be only the impelling or urging cause, and not the constituting, or efficient cause. As if there were two horses, and the one would do better without the spur than the other; but again, the other with the spur would far exceed the doing of the former, giving him the spur also; yet the latter will be judged to be the better horse: and the form as to say, "Tush, the life of this horse is but in the spur," will not serve as to a wise judgment: for, since the ordinary instrument of horsemanship is the spur, and that it is no matter of impediment or burthen, the horse is not to be accounted the less of, which will not do well without the spur: but the other is to be reckoned rather a delicacy, than a virtue. So Glory and Honour are the spurs to Virtue: and although Virtue would languish without them, yet since they be always at hand to attend Virtue, Virtue is not said to be the less chosen for itself, because it needeth the spur of Fame and Reputation. And therefore that position, "That the mark of a thing chosen for opinion, and not for truth sake, is this, That one would not do it, if he thought it would not be known," is determined.

SECTION 4.

"That which keeps a matter safe and entire, is good: but what is destitute and unprovided of a retreat, is bad. For, whereas all ability of acting is good; not to be able to withdraw oneself, is a kind of impotency."

HEREOF AESOP framed the fable of the two Frogs that consulted together in the time of drought.
(when many plashes that they had repaired to were dry) what was to be done: and the one proposed to go down into a deep well, because it was likely the water would not fail there; but the other answered, "Yea, but if it do fail, how shall we get up again?"

And the reason is, that human actions are so uncertain, and subject to perils, as to make that seem the best course, which hath most passages out of it. Appertaining to this persuasion, the forms are, "You shall engage yourself:" on the other side, "Take what lot you will;" or, you shall keep the matter in your own hand. The result of it is, that examining and resolving in all actions is necessary. For, as he saith well, "Not to resolve is to resolve;" so many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far, in some other sort, as to resolve. Thus it is but the covetous man's disease translated in effect; for the covetous man will enjoy nothing, because he will have his full store, and possibility to enjoy the more: and for this reason, a man would then execute nothing; in order that he might be still indifferent, and at liberty to execute any thing. But then, necessity, and this once having cast the dice, hath many times an advantage; because it awaketh the powers of the mind, and strengtheneth endeavour, which are able to deal with any others, and master them upon necessity.
SECTION 5.

"That which consists of more parts, and those divisible, is greater, and more One, than what is made up of fewer; for all things, when they are looked upon piece-meal, seem greater; whence also a plurality of parts makes show of a bulk considerable. Which a plurality of parts effects more strongly, if they be in no certain order; for it then resembles an infinity, and hinders the comprehending of them."

THIS appearance seemeth palpable; for though it is not plurality of parts, without majority of parts, that maketh the total greater; yet nevertheless, it often carries the mind away; yea, it deceiveth the sense; as it seemeth to the eye a shorter distance of way, if it be all dead and continued, than if it have trees, or buildings, or any other marks, whereby the eye may divide it. So when a great monied man hath divided his cheats, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was. And therefore the way to amplify any thing, is to break it in several parts, and to examine it according to several circumstances. And this maketh the greater show if it be done without order; for confusion maketh things muster more. And besides, what is set down by order and division, doth demonstrate that nothing is left out or omitted; but all is there: whereas, if it be without order, both the mind comprehendeth less that which is set down, and besides it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed.

This appearance deceiveth, if the mind of him that is to be persuaded, do of itself overconceive, or prejudge of the greatness of any thing; for then the breaking of it will make it seem less, because it makes it to appear more according to the truth. And therefore, if a man be in sickness or pain, the time will seem longer without a clock, or hour-glass, than with it: for the mind doth value every moment; and then the hour doth rather sum up the moments than divide the day. So in a dead plain the way seemeth the longer, because the eye hath pre-conceived it shorter, than the truth: and the correction of that maketh it seem longer than the truth. Therefore, if any man have an over-great opinion of any thing, and if another think, by breaking it into several considerations, he shall make it seem greater to him, then he will be deceived. And therefore, in such cases, it is not best to divide, but to extol the entire still in general.

Another case, wherein this appearance deceiveth, is, when the matter broken, or divided, is not comprehended by the sense, or understood at once in respect of the distracting or scattering of it; as being entire, and not divided, it would be comprehended. An hundred pounds in heaps of five pounds will show more than in one gross heap: so as the heaps be all upon one table to be seen at once; otherwise not. As flowers also, growing scattered in divers beds, will show more than if they did grow in one bed: provided all those beds be within a plot, that they be under view at once; otherwise not. And therefore men whose living lieth together in one shire, are commonly counted greater-landed, than those whose livings are dispersed, though it be more; because of the simultaneous notice and comprehension.

A third case, wherein this appearance deceiveth, which is not so properly a case or conclusion, as it is a false appearance, being in effect, as near as possible, the exact appearance of the thing itself, is, "That every composition seems to partake of a certain want:" because, if one thing would serve the turn, it were ever best; but it is the defect and imperfection of things that hath brought in that help to piece them up: as it is said, Luke x. 41, 42. "Martha, Martha, thou art troubled about many things; one thing is sufficient." So likewise hereupon Æsop framed the fable of the Fox and the Cat: wherein the Fox bragged, what a number of shifts and devices he had, to get from the hounds; and the Cat said, he had but one, which was to climb a tree; which in fact was better worth than all the rest; whereof the proverb grew,

"Reynard the hounds to 'scape had shifts not small;
Grimalkin only one, as good as all."

And in the moral of this fable, it comes likewise to pass, "That a good sure friend is a better help at a pinch, than all the stratagems and policies of man's own wit." Thus it falleth out to be a common error in negotiating; wherein men have many reasons to induce or persuade, so they strive commonly to utter, and use them all at once, which weakeneth them. For it argueth, as was said, a neediness in each of the reasons by itself, as if one did not trust to any of them, but fled from one to another, helping himself only with that.

"And what help'd not alone before,
Doth help full well, when join'd with more."

Indeed, in a set speech in an assembly, it is expected a man should use all his reasons in the case he handleth: but in private persuasions it is always a great error.

A fourth case, wherein this appearance may be understood, is in the acknowledged strength of an united power; according to the tale of the French King, who, when the Emperor's Ambassador had recited his master's style at large, which consisteth of many countries, and dominions, the FRENCH King willed his Chancellor, or other Minister, to repeat over FRANCE as many times as the other had recited the several dominions; intending that it was equivalent with them all, and more compacted and united.

There is also appertaining to this appearance another point, why breaking of a thing doth help it; not by way of adding a show of magnitude unto it, but a note of excellency and rarity: whereof the forms are, "Where you shall find such a concurrence? Great, but not complete;" for it seems a less work of Nature or Fortune, to make any thing in his kind greater than ordinary, than to make a strange composition. Yet, if it be narrowly considered, this appearance will be denied, or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or (at least) a risk, or jeopardy: for from that which is excellent in greatness, somewhat may be taken, or there may be a decay, and yet sufficiently left; but from that which hath his price because complete in the aggregate, if you take away any thing, or any part do fail, all is disgraced.
SECTION 6.

"That whose privation (or the want of which) is Good, is in itself Evil: that whose privation (or the want whereof) is an Evil, is in itself Good."

The phrases to make it conceived, that that was Evil, which is changed for the better, are, "He that is in Hell, thinks there is no Heaven." "Acorns were good, till bread was found, &c." And on the other side, the forms to make it conceived, that that was good, which was changed for the worse, are; that we understand the goodness of things more by wanting, than enjoying them. "Bona à tergo formosissima:" i. e. "Good things never appear in their full beauty, till they turn their back and be going away, &c."

The argument against this appearance is, That the Good or Evil which is removed, may be esteemed Good or Evil, comparatively; and not positively, or simply. So that, if the privation be good, it follows not, that the former condition was evil, but less good: for the flower or blossom is a positive Good; although the remove of it, to give place to the fruit, be a comparative Good. So in the tale of Æsop, when the old fainting man in the heat of the day cast down his burthen, and called for Death; and when _Death_ came to know his _will_ with him, said, "It was for nothing, but to help him up with his _burthen_ again;" it doth not follow, that because _Death_, which was the _privation_ of the _burthen_, was _ill_, therefore the _burthen_ was _good_. And in this part the ordinary _form_ of a necessary _Evil_ aptly confutes this _appearance_; for the _privation_ of a necessary _Evil_ is _Evil_; and yet that doth not convert the _nature_ of the necessary _Evil_, but it is _Evil_.

Again, it cometh sometimes to pass, that there is an _equality_ in the change of _privation_, and (as it were) a _Dilemma boni_, of the _Good_; or, _Dilemma mali_, of the _Evil_; so that the _corruption_ of one _Good_, is a _generation_ of the _other_.

"Both chances the same equal parent have:"

And contrarily, the _remedy_ of the one _Evil_, is the _occasion_ and _commencement_ of another; as in _Scylla_ and _Charybdis_.

SECTION 7.

"What is near to _Good_, is _Good_: What is at _distance_ from _Good_, is _Evil_."

_Such_ is the _nature_ of things, that things _contrary_, and _distant_ in _nature and quality_; and also _severed_ and _disjoined_ in _place_; and things _like_, and _com-senting in quality, are placed, and (as it were) quartered together: for partly, in regard of the nature, to spread, multiply, and infect in similitude; and partly, in regard of the nature, to break, expel, and alter that which is disagreeable and contrary, most things do either associate, and draw near to themselves the like, or (at least) assimilate to themselves that which approacheth near them, and do also drive away, chase, and exterminate their contraries. And that is the reason commonly urged, why the middle region of the air should be coldest; because the Sun and Stars are either hot by direct beams, or by reflection. The direct beams heat the upper region; the reflected beams from the Earth and Seas, heat the lower region. That which is in the middest, being further distant in place from these two regions of heat, is most distant in nature, that is coldest, for which reason they term cold, or hot, repulsive qualities, that is, environing by contraries: which was pleasantly taken hold of by him, who said, that an honest man in these days must needs be more honest than in ages heretofore; because the shutting of him in the midst of contraries must needs make the honester stronger, and more compact in itself.

The confuting of this appearance is therefore:

First, many things of amplitude in their kind do
(as it were) engross to themselves all, and leave that which is next them, most destitute. As the shoots, or under-woods, that grow near a great and spread tree, are the most pined and shrubby wood of the field; because the great tree doth deprive and deceive them of the sap and nourishment; so he saith well, "That rich men's servants are the greatest slaves:" and the comparison was pleasant of him, that compared Courtiers attendant in the courts of Princes, without great place or office, to Fasting-days; which were next the Holidays, but otherwise were the leanest days in all the week.

Another objection is, that things of greatness and predominancy, though they do not extenuate the things adjoining in substances, yet they drown them, and obscure them in show and appearance. And therefore the astronomers say; that, whereas in all other planets conjunction is the perfectest amity, the Sun contrariwise is good by aspect, but evil by conjunction.

A third reprehension is, because Evil approacheth to Good, sometimes for concealment, sometimes for protection: and Good to Evil for conversion and reformation. So Hypocrisy draweth near to Religion for covert and hiding itself.

"Oft, under neighboring Good, Vice shrowded lies."

And Sanctuary-men, which were commonly.
nate men, and malefactors, were wont to be nearest to Priests, and Prelates, and holy-men: for the majesty of good things is such, as the confines of them are reverend. On the other side, our Saviour, charged with nearness of publicans and rioters, said, Matt. ix. 11. "The physician approacheth the sick rather than the whole."

SECTION 8.

"That which a man hath procured by his own default, is a greater mischief (or Evil); that which is laid on him by others, is a lesser Evil."

The reason is, because the sting and remorse of the mind, accusing itself, doubleth all adversity: on the contrary, the considering and recording inwardly, that a man is clear and free from fault, and just imputation, doth soften outward calamities. For if the Will be in the sense, and in the Conscience both, there is a doubling of it: but if Evil be in the one, and Comfort in the other, it is a kind of compensation. So the poets in tragedies do make the most passionate lamentation, and those that forerun final despair, to be accusing, questioning, and torturing of a man's self.

"She railing doth confess herself to be,
The cause and source of her own misery."
OF GOOD AND EVIL.

And contrariwise, the sufferings of worthy persons have been annihilated by the consideration of their own good deserving. Besides, when the Evil cometh from without, there is left a kind of evaporation of grief, if it come by human injury, either by indignation, and meditating of revenge from ourselves, or by expecting; or fore-conceiving, that justice and retribution will take hold of the authors of our hurt; or, if it be by fortune or accident, yet there is left a kind of expostulation against the Divine Powers.

"The Gods and cruel Stars the mother doth charge."

But, where the Evil is derived from a man's own fault, there all strikes deadly inwards and suffoceth.

The objection to this appearance is:

First, in respect of hope: for reformation of our fault is in our own power; but amendment of our fortune simply is not. Therefore Demosthenes, in many of his orations, saith thus to the people of Athens: "That which having regard to the time past, is the worst point and circumstance of all the rest; that, as to the time to come, is the best. Why is that? even thus, That by your sloth, irresolution, and misgovernment, your affairs are grown to this declination and decay. For, had you used and ordered your means and forces to the best, and done your parts every way to the full; and notwithstanding, your matters should have gone backward in this manner as they do; there had been no hope left of recovery or reputation. But since it hath been only by your own errors," &c. So Epictetus in his Deorget saith: "The worst state of man is to accuse past things; better than that, to accuse any man's self; and best of all, to accuse neither."

Another objection to this appearance is in respect of the well-bearing of Evils, wherewith a man can charge nobody but himself, which maketh them the less.

"That burthen's light, that's on discreetly laid."

And therefore many natures, that are extremely proud, and will take no fault to themselves; or else very true, and cleaving to themselves, (when they see the blame of any thing that falls out ill, must light upon themselves) have no other shift, but to bear it out well, and to make the least of it: for, as we see, when sometimes a fault is committed, and before it be known who is to blame, much ado is made of it; but after, if it appear to be done by a son, or by a wife, or by a near friend, then it is light made of: much more so, when a man must take it upon himself. And therefore it is commonly seen, that women who marry husbands of their own choosing, against their friends' consents, if they.
be never so ill used, yet you shall seldom see them complain, but set a good face on it.

SECTION 9.

"That which is gotten by our own pains and industry, is a greater Good; that which comes by another man's courtesy, or the indulgence of Fortune, is a lesser Good."

THE reasons are,

First, The future hope: because in the favour of others, or the good winds of Fortune, we have no state, or certainty; in our own endeavours, or abilities, we have. So that when they have purchased us one good fortune, we have them as ready, and better edged and environed to procure another.

The forms are: "You have won this by play. You have not only the water; but you have the receipt: you can make it again, if it be lost," &c.

Next: because these properties, which we enjoy by the benefit of others, carry with them an obligation, which seemeth a kind of burthen: whereas the other, which arise from ourselves, are like the freest parents, "Absque aliquo inde reddendo," without making any restitution. And, if they proceed from Fortune, or Providence, yet they seem to touch us secretly with the reverence of the Divine Power, whose favours we taste, and therefore work.
a kind of religious fear and restraint: whereas, in the other kind, that comes to pass, which the Prophet speaketh, Ezek.: "Men are glad, they rejoice, they offer to their toils, and sacrifice to their nets."

Thirdly, Because that which cometh unto us without our own virtue, yieldeth not that commendation and reputation: for actions of great felicity may draw wonder, yet little praise; as Cicero said to Caesar: "They had what they might wonder at, but expected what they might praise."

Fourthly, Because the purchases of our own industry are joined commonly with labour and exertion; which gives an edge and appetite, and makes the fruition of our desires more pleasant. "Venison is sweet of one's own killing."

On the other side, there are four shades to this appearance, rather than objections; because they are as large as the appearance itself.

First, Because Felicity seemeth to be a character of the favour and love of the Divine Power; and accordingly works both confidence in ourselves, and respect and authority from others. And this felicity extendeth to many casual things; whereunto the care or virtue of man cannot extend; and therefore seemeth to be at large good. As when Caesar said to the alarmed sailor in a storm, "Caesarem portas, et fortunam ejus," that he carried Cæsar and his fortune: if he had said, “et virtutem ejus,” and his valour; it had been small comfort against a tempest; otherwise than if it might seem, upon merit, to induce fortune.

Next, Whatsoever is done by virtue and industry, seems to be done by a kind of habit and art; and thereupon open to be imitated and followed: whereas felicity is inimitable. So we generally see, that things of Nature seem more excellent than things of Art, because these be imitable; for, “What is imitable, is by a certain power made known abroad.”

Thirdly, Felicity commendeth those things which come without our own labour: for they seem gifts, and the others seem pennyworths. Whereupon Plutarch saith elegantly of the acts of Timoleon, who was so fortunate, compared with the acts of Agesilaus and Epaminondas, “That they were like Homer’s verses; they ran so easily, and so well.” And therefore it is the word we give unto poesy, terming it a happy vein: because facility seemeth ever to come from Happiness.

Fourthly, “When things happen against hope or expectation,” it doth increase the price and pleasure of many things; and this cannot be incident to those things that proceed from our own care, and compassing.
SECTION 10.

"The degree of privation seems greater than the degree of diminution: and again, the degree of inception (or beginning) seems greater than the degree of increase."

It is a position in the Mathematics, that there is no proportion between somewhat and nothing: therefore the degree of nullity and quiddity (or act) seemeth larger, than the degrees of increase and decrease. As to a monoculus, it is more to lose one eye, than to a man that hath two eyes. So, if one have lost divers children, it is more grief to him to lose the last, than all the rest; because he is the hope of his stock. And therefore Sybilla, when she brought three books, and had burned two, doubled the whole price of both the other; because the burning of that had been "a degree of privation," and not of diminution.

This appearance is confuted:

First, In those things, the use and service whereof resteth in sufficiency, competency, or determinate quantity: as, if a man be to pay one hundred pounds upon penalty, it is more to him to want twelve pence, than after that twelve pence, supposed to be wanting, to want ten shillings more. So the decay of a man's estate seems to be most touched in the degree, when he first grows behind, more than afterwards, when he proves nothing worth. And hereof the common phrases are: "It is too late to pinch, when the purse is at the bottom;" and, "As good never a whit as never the better."

It is objected to also in respect of that notion: "That the corruption of one thing is the generation of another." So that the privative degree is many times less matter, because it gives the cause and motive to some new course. As when Demosthenes reprehended the people for hearkening to the conditions offered by King Philip, being not honourable, nor equal, he saith: "They were but elements of their sloth and weakness; which if they were taken away, necessity would teach them stronger resolutions." So Doctor Hector was wont to say to the dames of London, when they complained, they were they could not tell how, but yet they could not endure to take any medicine; he would tell them, their way was only to be sick; for then they would be glad to take any medicine.

Thirdly, This appearance may be denied in respect that the degree of decrease is more sensitive than the degree of privation; for in the mind of men, the degree of decrease may work a wavering between hope and fear, and keep the mind in suspense, from settling, and accommodating.
patience and resolution. Hereof the common phrases are: "Better cry out, than always ask; make or mar," &c.

For the second branch of this appearance, it depends upon the same general reason: hence grew the common place of extolling the beginning of every thing,

"He hath his work half done, Whoe'er hath well begun."

This made the Astrologers so silly, as to judge of a man’s nature and destiny, by the constellation of the moment of his nativity or conception.

This appearance is also denied, because many inceptions are but (as Epicurus termeth them) tentamenta, that is, imperfect offers and essays, which vanish, and come to no substance, without any iteration: so as, in such cases, the second degree seems the worthiest; as the body-horse in the cart, that draweth more than the fore-horse. Hereof the common adages are: "The second blow makes the fray. The second word makes the bargain." The one began, the other kept no mean.

Another objection to this appearance, is in respect of wearisomeness, which makes perseverance of greater dignity, than inception: for chance or instinct of nature may cause inception; but settled affection, or judgment, maketh the continuance.

Thirdly, This appearance is denied in such things, which have a natural course and inclination contrary to an inception. So that the inception is continually evacuated, and gets no start, but that there be always a beginning; as in the common forms: "Not to go forward, is to go backward." "He who makes no progress, decays." "Running against a hill; rowing against the stream," &c. For if it be with the stream, or with the hill, then the degree of inception is more than all the rest.

Fourthly, This appearance is to be understood "of the degree of inception, in comparison of the power with the act, not of the degree from the act to the increase." For otherwise, the degree from impotency to potency seems greater, than from the power to the act.

SECTION 11.

"That which men praise and celebrate, is good; that which they disgrace and reprehend, is bad."

This appearance deceives four ways, viz. either through ignorance, or through want of integrity; or through particular respect and faction; or through the natural inclination of those that praise or dispraise. First, Through ignorance; for what signifies the judgment of the rabble in distinguishing and determining Good and Evil? Phocion knew well enough, who, when the people applauded him more than ordinary, asked, "Whether he had done any thing amiss?" Secondly, Through want of integrity; for those that praise and dispraise, commonly carry on their own designs and do not speak what they think.

"Every man praises the wares he would put off."

It is naught, it is naught, says the buyer; but when he is gone, he vaunteth. Thirdly, out of partiality; for every one knows, that men use to extol with immoderate praise those that are on their own side, and to depress those of the adverse party below their desert. Lastly, through a natural inclination; for some men are by nature framed and moulded for servile fawning and flattery, whilst others on the contrary are stiff, captious, and morose; and when these commend or inveigh, they do but comply with their own humours, not troubling their heads overmuch about the truth of the business.

SECTION 12.

"That which draws commendation even from Enemies, is a great Good; but that which is reprehended even by Friends, is a great Evil."

This appearance seems to stand upon this foundation, That it may well be believed, that the force of Truth extorts from us whatsoever we affirm to be against our wills, and contrary to the bent and inclination of our minds.

This appearance deceives through the subtilty, as well of enemies as friends: for the praises of enemies are not always against their wills, nor as forced by truth; but they choose to bestow them in such cases where they may create envy or danger to their adversaries. Therefore the Grecians had a superstitious fancy, that if a man were commended by another out of spite, and with a mischievous design, he would have a pimple rise upon his nose. Besides, sometimes enemies bestow praises, like preambles, as it were, that they may the more freely and maliciously calumniate. On the other side, this appearance deceives, from the craft of friends; for they will sometimes take notice of the faults of their friends, and speak freely of them: but they choose such as may do them little hurt, as if for all the rest they were the best men in the world. Again, it deceives, because friends use their reprehensions (as we said enemies do their commendations) as certain little prefaces, after which they may expatiate more freely in their praises.
An Essay on Death.

1. I HAVE often thought upon Death, and I find it the least of all evils. All that which is past is as a dream; and he that hopes or depends upon time coming, dreams waking. So much of our life as we have discovered, is already dead; and all those hours which we share, even from the breasts of our mother until we return to our grandmother the earth, are part of our dying days; whereof even this is one, and those that succeed are of the same nature, for we die daily; and as others have given place to us, so we must in the end give way to others.

2. Physicians, in the name of death include all sorrow, anguish, disease, calamity, or whatsoever can fall in the life of man, either grievous or unwelcome: but these things are familiar unto us, and we suffer them every hour; therefore we die daily, and I am older since I affirmed it.

3. I know many wise men, that fear to die; for the change is bitter, and flesh would refuse to prove it: besides, the expectation brings terror, and that exceeds the evil. But I do not believe that any man fears to be dead, but only the stroke of death: and such are my hopes, that if heaven be pleased, and nature renew but my lease, for twenty-one years, without asking longer days, I shall be strong enough to acknowledge without mourning, that I was begotten mortal. Virtue walks not in the highway, though she goes per alta. This is strength and the blood to virtue, to contemn things that be desired, and to neglect that which is feared.

4. Why should man be in love with his fetters, though of gold? Art thou drowned in security? Then I say thou art perfectly dead. For though thou movest, yet thy soul is buried within thee, and thy good angel either forsakes his guard or sleeps. There is nothing under heaven, saving a true friend, who cannot be counted within the number of moveables, unto which my heart doth lean. And this dear freedom hath begotten me this peace, that I mourn not for that end which must be, nor spend one wish to have one minute added to the uncertain date of my years. It was no mean apprehension of Lucian, who says of Menippus, that in his travels through hell he knew not the kings of the earth from other men, but only by their louder cryings and tears: which was fostered in them through the remorseful memory of the good days they had seen, and the fruitful havings which they so unwillingly left behind them: he that was well seated, looked back at his portion, and was loth to forsake his farm; and others either minding marriages, pleasures, profit, or prey.
ferment, desired to be excused from death's banquet: they had made an appointment with earth, looking at the blessings, not the hand that enlarged them, forgetting how unclothedly they came hither, or with what naked ornaments they were arrayed.

5. But were we servants of the precepts given, and observers of the heathen's rule, memento mori, and not become benighted with this seeming felicity, we should enjoy it as men prepared to lose it, and not wind up our thoughts upon so perishing a fortune; he that is not slackly strong, as the servants of pleasure, how can he be found unready to quit the veil and false visage of his perfection? The soul having shaken off her flesh, doth then set up for herself, and, contemning things that are under, shows what finger hath enforced her: for the souls of idiots are of the same piece with those of statesmen; but now and then nature is at a fault, and this good guest of ours takes soil in an imperfect body, and so is slackened from showing her wonders; like an excellent musician, which cannot utter himself upon a defective instrument.

6. But see how I am swerved, and lose my course, touching at the soul, that doth least hold action with Death, who hath the surest property in this frail act; his style is the end of all flesh, and the beginning of incorruption.
AN ESSAY ON DEATH.

This, ruler of monuments leads men for the most part out of this world with their heels forward; in token that he is contrary to life; which being obtained, sends men headlong into this wretched theatre, where being arrived, their first language is that of mourning. Nor, in my own thoughts, can I compare men more fitly to any thing, than to the Indian fig-tree, which being ripened to its full height, is said to decline its branches down to the earth; whereof she conceives again, and they become roots in their own stock.

So man, having derived his being from the earth, first lives the life of a tree, drawing his nourishment as a plant; and made ripe for Death, he tends downwards, and is sowed again in his mother the earth, where he perisheth not, but expects a quickening.

7. So we see Death exempts not a man from being, but only presents an alteration: yet there are some men, I think, that stand otherwise persuaded. Death finds not a worse friend than an alderman, to whose door I never knew him welcome; but he is an importunate guest, and will not be said nay.

And though they themselves shall affirm, that they are not within, yet the answer will not be taken; and that which heightens the fear is, that they know they are in danger to forfeit their flesh.
but are not wise of the payment day: which sickly uncertainty is the occasion that, for the most part, they step out of this world unfurnished for their general account, and, being all unprovided, desire yet to hold their gravity, preparing their souls to answer in scarlet.

Thus I gather, that Death is disagreeable to most citizens, because they commonly die intestate; this being a rule, that when their will is made, they think themselves nearer a grave than before: now they, out of the wisdom of thousands, think to scare destiny, from which there is no appeal, by not making a will, or to live longer by protestation of their unwillingness to die. They are for the most part well made in this world, accounting their treasure by legions, as men do devils; their fortune looks towards them, and they are willing to anchor at it, and desire, if it be possible, to put the evil day far from them, and to adjourn their ungrateful and killing period.

No, these are not the men which have bespoken Death, or whose looks are assured to entertain a thought of him.

8. Death arrives gracious only to such as sit in darkness, or lie heavy burthened with grief and irons; to the poor Christian, that sits bound in the galley; to despairful widows, pensive prisoners, and deposed kings: to those whose fortune runs back, and whose spirit mutinies; unto such Death is a redeemer, and the grave a place for retiredness and rest.

These wait upon the shore of Death, and waft unto him to draw near, wishing above all others, to see his star, that they might be led to his place, wooing the remorseless sisters to wind down the watch of their life, and to break them off before the hour.

9. But Death is a doleful messenger to an usurer, and fate untimely cuts his thread: for it is never mentioned by him, but when rumours of war and civil tumults put him in mind thereof.

And when many hands are armed, and the peace of a city in disorder, and the foot of the common soldiers sound an alarm upon his stairs, then perhaps such a one, broken in thoughts of his moneys abroad, and cursing the monuments of coin which are in his house, can be content to think of Death, and, being hasty of perdition, will perhaps hang himself, lest his throat should be cut; provided that he may do it in his study, surrounded with wealth, to which his eye sends a faint and languishing salute, even upon the turning off; remembering always, that he have time and liberty, by writing, to depute himself as his own heir.
AN ESSAY ON DEATH.

For that is a great peace to his end, and reconciles himself wonderfully upon the point.

10. Herein we all daily with ourselves, and are without proof till necessity. I am not of those that dare promise to pine away myself in vain-glory, and I hold such to be but feat boldness, and them that dare commit it to be vain. Yet for my part, I think nature should do me great wrong, if I should be so long in dying, as I was in being born.

To speak truth, no man knows the lists of his own patience; nor can devine how able he shall be in his sufferings, till the storm come, the perfectest virtue being tried in action; but I would, out of a care to do the best business well, ever keep a guard, and stand upon keeping faith and a good conscience.

11. And if wishes might find place, I would die together; and not my mind often, and my body once; that is, I would prepare for the messengers of Death, sickness and affliction, and not wait long, or be urged only by the violence of pain.

Herein I do not profess myself a Stoic, to hold grief no evil, but opinion, and a thing indifferent.

But I agree with Cæsar, that the suddenest passage is easiest, and there is nothing more awakens our resolve and readiness to die, than the quieted conscience, strengthened with opinion that we shall be well spoken of upon earth by those that are just, and of the family of virtue; the opposite whereof is a fury to man, and makes even life unsweet.

Therefore, what is more heavy than evil fame deserved? Or, likewise, who can see worse days than he that, yet living, doth follow at the funerals of his own reputation?

I have laid up many hopes, that I am privileged from that kind of mourning, and could wish the like peace to all those with whom I wage love.

12. I might say much of the commodities that Death can sell a man: but briefly, Death is a friend of ours; and he that is not ready to entertain him, is not at home. Whilst I am, my ambition is not to fore-flow the tide; I have but so to make my interest of it, as I may account for it: I would wish nothing but what might better my days, nor desire any greater place than the front of good opinion. I make not love to the continuance of days, but to the improvement of them; nor wish to die, but refer myself to my hour, which the great Dispenser of all things hath appointed me: yet, as I am frail, and suffered for the first fault, were it given me to choose, I should not be earnest to see the evening of my age; that extremity itself being a disease, and a mere return into infancy: so that if perpe-